LINOTYPE SCHOOL IN PARIS

Profits of Combined Paper During Printers' Strike So Applied

EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S Paris Bureau

PARIS, April 17.—As already reported in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of Feb. 24, the profits from the Presse de Paris, the combined newspaper issued during the printers' strike in 1919, were devoted to founding a school for linotype operators. The Syndicat de la Presse Parisienne now announces that four linotypes and four intertypes with silent keyboards have been installed on the premises of the Association, and in a week or so the first batch of linotype pupils will be receiving instruction.

The Government has taken an active interest in the enterprise, and the Under Secretary of State for Technical Education has promised a subsidy. The Syndicat de la Presse Parisienne states in a report just issued that there are at present 3,100 linotypes and 150 intertypes in France. Great difficulty is experienced in finding efficient operators, so the school will supply a long felt want.

CURTIS ENTERTAINS ON YACHT

Philadelphia Publisher Is Host to Advertising Men

Cyrus H. K. Curtis recently entertained F. A. Wilson-Lawrenson of the Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation, William H. Rankin, and A. S. Brown of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at luncheon on his yacht Lyndonia at Philadelphia.

Mr. Curtis is going to London early in May.

Linotype Executive Abroad

Norman Dodge, vice-president and general manager of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, sailed on the S. S. Majestic April 21 for a two months' business trip abroad. He will visit England, Belgium, Holland and Germany, and will make stays of several days at the headquarters of Linotype & Machinery, Ltd., London; Societe Linotype Francaise, Paris; Dismet & Asiel, Brussels, and Mergenthaler Setzmaschinen-Fabrik, Berlin.

CONTRACT OF AGENCY UPHELD BY JURY

N. W. Ayer & Son Are Awarded Verdict Against U. S. Rubber Company for the Full Amount Claimed, $178,620.87

In April, 1916, the United States Rubber Company placed its advertising for its footwear and clothing and its mechanical goods divisions with N. W. Ayer & Son. The contract was to run for a year and thereafter until terminated upon three months written notice by either party.

In December, 1917, the contract was extended to cover the advertising of the tire division, and during 1918 and part of 1919 N. W. Ayer & Son handled all of the advertising for the United States Rubber Company in the United States, with the exception of advertising in trade papers.

In the Spring of 1919 it came to the attention of N. W. Ayer & Son that the rubber company had appointed a committee to review the entire subject of its advertising and that it had been decided that the advertising for each division should be handled separately. Therefor, Ayer & Son, in order to relieve the company of any embarrassment, voluntarily offered to terminate their contract upon completion of the orders then in hand. In the summer of 1919, this offer was accepted for the footwear and clothing and the mechanical goods division.

In the case of the tire division, J. N. Gunn, vice-president in charge of this division, announced the company had no immediate intention of making any change and that in any event they wished Ayer & Son to continue until the end of the selling season. Accordingly, Ayer & Son went ahead making preparations for advertising to run during 1920. In November, 1919, at a conference of newspaper publishers in New York, a general increase of advertising rates was announced. Immediately following this announcement, with the authority of the United States Rubber Company, Ayer & Son entered into contracts with more than a thousand newspapers all over the country in order to secure the advantages of the then existing rate. In addition, Ayer & Son, acting as they say in every case with the full knowledge and approval of the rubber company, made reservation for space in various farm periodicals and national and weekly magazines.

By letter of Dec. 15, 1919, the company notified Ayer & Son that it had decided to make a change in the advertising for the tire division and that after Jan. 1, 1920, this advertising would be handled by another agent. Ayer & Son were asked to co-operate in adjustment of any outstanding business and in the transfer of its business to the new agency.

To this Ayer & Son replied that they had entered into contracts on behalf of the rubber company, upon the financial responsibility of Ayer & Son, to the amount of upwards of $1,000,000; that the good faith of N. W. Ayer & Son's contracts with publishers had never been questioned, and that under their contract with the rubber company none other than themselves could be asked to complete these contracts. To this the rubber company replied that it had instructed the publishers to transfer these reservations to the new agency and that the new agency would furnish copy.

Thereupon Ayer & Son wrote that while they would prefer to carry out these orders to a completion and give to the rubber company the advantage of their full service in that respect, still if the company insisted they would offer no objection to some other agency furnishing the copy and upon request of the company would at once make all contracts with publishers made on its account available to its order, but would expect payment of the amount of their commission in due course. To this the company replied in substance that it did not wish N. W. Ayer & Son to have anything further to do with its advertising and that these matters would be handled by another agent.

At the trial of the suit brought under this contract in Common Pleas Court, Philadelphia, it appeared that the rubber company had made use of the space contracted for by Ayer & Son to the amount of approximately $1,000,000 and had obtained the benefit not only of the space in rate but also in the preferred positions as result of the contracts and reservations which Ayer & Son had made. Ayer & Son claimed commission on the amount of space thus used. The trial lasted more than a week and at the conclusion the jury on April 18 rendered a verdict in favor of Ayer & Son for the full amount claimed—$178,620.87.

FILL OPEN SHOP WIT UNION MEN IS PLAN

Florida Typographical Conferen Hears this Method Urged As Way to Deal with the Tampa Tribune

The semi-annual convention of t Florida Typographical Conference, he at the Hotel Roberts, Miami, April was largely taken up with a discussion the open shop being maintained by t Tampa Tribune. Many delegates e pressed the belief that union men cou be put into the shop one by one until t entire composing room could be unio ized when it might be possible to sign the whole plant.

The advisability of broadening t scope of the organization by taking in t pressmen, engravers, bookbinders a stereotypers, and of the formation of Florida Allied Printing Trades Coun was discussed at some length. It w declared that the typographical indust was too small in Florida to admit of successful union. The matter was r ferred to a reorganization committee report later in the year.

The proposal to establish a printers home on the East coast of Florida ne West Palm Beach was debated favo ably. J. B. O'Hara, president of t Florida Typographical Conference, h offered 50 acres free of cost. Flori delegates to the Atlanta convention the I. T. U. will back this proposal.

The constitution and by-laws we changed so that officers could be elect whether present during the election not and also so that more than one o ficer could be elected from the san union.

At the banquet following the busine session, Editor-in-Chief Stoneman of t Miami Herald spoke on "The History Florida Newspapers" and Miss M. F. I Powell, labor organizer and lecturer fro Australia, spoke on the attitude of worl ers toward the press and the attitude the press toward the workers, it beir her contention that the one is the resu of the other.

The next meeting place was left to t organization committee but it was felt would be Jacksonville.

The election resulted in the followir choices: President, J. B. O'Hara, Lak Worth, re-elected; vice president, W. I Griffis, Miami; second vice president, C. Collins, Jacksonville; secretary-trea urer, J. E. Brenkworth, West Pal Beach; executive committee, S. B. An drews, Tampa, and H. B. Carrington Miami.

PRESS IS THE TONGUE OF THE WORLD, AD BUREAU SPEAKERS' THEME

Lord Robert Cecil Sees League as Increasingly Vital Force—Senator Pepper Says Form of U. S. Co-operation Is Not Important—Gerard Suggests Cut in Debt Interest

INTERNATIONAL affairs was the post-prandial topic of the publishers' week. Not to be outdone by the Associated Press, which made its luncheon on Tuesday the scene of President Harding's declaration of policy on American foreign relations, the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association at its annual banquet Thursday night at the Waldorf-Astoria presented advocates of several forms of participation by America in the business of the world.

Louis Wiley

Senator George Wharton Pepper, of Pennsylvania, declared that finding a cure for the world's illnesses was more important than finding a way to apply it.

Lord Robert Cecil, Great Britain's distinguished advocate of the League of Nations, ended his American tour by stating his conviction that the League would live.

Former Ambassador James W. Gerard urged that the United States demonstrate its friendship for Europe by cutting the interest on the British debt by one per cent for ten years.

James A. Emery, counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, asked whether the new principle was to be that Government should interfere where it may, or only where it must.

Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, was toastmaster, and had the more than one thousand diners at attention throughout.

Will Rogers, of the Ziegfeld Follies, poked fun at them all—including the distinguished speaker at the Associated Press luncheon.

Entertainment was rendered by the band of the 101st Cavalry, N. Y. N. G., part of the command of Brig.-Gen. Mortimer D. Bryant, an advisory member of the committee in charge of the Ad Bureau; and by the Ukrainian National Chorus, who, dressed in picturesque native costumes, rendered the folk-songs of their home land and several American selections.

Chairman William E. Rogers read a telegram from President Harding regretting his inability to remain over for the occasion.

Louis Wiley, toastmaster, opened the program with the following remarks:

"I am directed by the publishers of the newspapers of New York to offer a welcome on their behalf to their colleagues of the nation assembled here.

"You may assert that the metropolitan publishers are outsiders. It is true New York's newspapers are largely in the hands of men who came from other sections. Mr. Munsey was born in Maine, Mr. Ochs came from Tennessee, Mr. Hearst from California, Arthur Brisbane from Brook Farm. Mr. Gay of the Evening Post is from Michigan, Mr. McCormick and Mr. Patterson of the Daily News receive most of their mail in Chicago. Even our Mayor, a liberal contributor to the press, comes from Brooklyn.

"The slogans of New York newspapers are rapidly changing. 'The Morning Sun Surprises' has been succeeded by 'Hark, the Herald Angels Sing.' Now the Sun rises in the evening and spends most of its time setting.

"As a survivor of at least 2,000 public dinners in the last thirty years, I may claim a knowledge of the requirements as well as the vexations of such functions. One of the latter is the tendency of the chairman to occupy too much time.

"The chairman tonight will strive to be neither incubus nor incubator. He will temper justice with mercy. He will not be a center of gravity. He will not review the problems of the world or permit anything that occurs to remind him of a story, although he knows several.

"He will try to represent here the spirit of Mr. Munsey's latest experiment, The Summary, and join with the speakers in keeping within the limits set for that publication, ten minutes.

"Advertising is one of the principal industries of America. One billion dollars is expended for it annually. In spite of inordinate special taxation, of excessive postal rates, of difficult labor conditions, the newspapers of America are prospering.

"It is highly important that in the welter of hatred and suspicion and unkindness in the world the chiefs of the newspapers of America should come together to restate the principles upon which self-respecting journalism is built and to reassert the ideals upon which our institutions are founded.

"It is essential in the midst of many world problems that there should be the widest public information and the freest discussion. We sometimes see only a little of the truth and thereby become unyielding partisans."

James A. Emery, counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, said in part:

"After six thousand years of recorded history, we sum up all the immense progress of mankind in the control of the great forces of Nature within the last 150 years that we say comprehend the industrial revolution.

"Each period of that amazing growth has found the industrial organization as the formal means of organizing and administering the progressive discoveries of science and the contributions of invention to actual use in the social affairs of men.

"Responsive in each stage, it has within the short period of a century wrought the tremendous revolution that has transformed the Napoleonic Europe of independent self-sustaining agricultural states into the interdependent industrial world of the Great War and of today.

"At each stage of the movement it has contributed to the immediate cry of some want, and of some demand. Why, even as Hood was drawing the tears of England to the pathetic song of the shirt, there was a gaunt Yankee in a Cambridge garret setting it to the music of the revolutionary notes of the sewing machine.

"And even as the great contribution of another Yankee had founded the kingdom of cotton and set on foot by its industrial transformations the great body of economic and political issues that burst into final fruit in the struggle of the Civil War, so it was another that released thousands of men to the summons of Lincoln, when McCormick made free the reaper.

"But all those contributions to mere industrial production, to the multiplied power of the human hand were accompanied at every stage by contributions that have revolutionized your profession. The slow means of communication of the past have given way to this amazing control over the instantaneous communication of the present.

"You are tonight the quickest and the loudest tongue of the worlds' affairs. Hardly does the explorer emerge from the depths of a Pharoah's tomb when the world is cataloguing its contents. The secrets of conclaves of ambassadors are uttered to the world as they meet in conference. Even the executive proceedings of the Senate seem to find always present some accredited senatorial reporter.

"Nay, more, the quick speed of your great publication seems at its best when the cry of some convict in a camp is uttered in every household on the morrow, and in response to the resentment of an outraged opinion, a legislature acts; and even in distant Russia the news of the proceedings within a courtroom, the dull shot within a Moscow cellar, echoes in the ear of a listening world, and the indignation of mankind reacts within the day upon a nation.

"One hundred years ago an American general won a victory and founded a political career upon a battle won two weeks after the signing of a treaty of peace, and a century later, your premature enterprise came within a hair's breadth of celebrating an armistice 24 hours before it occured. (Laughter.)

"All that we have gathered and organized into what we term our industrial structure represents, over the period of time, just the conquest of man over nature, by which he has multiplied the power of his hand and turned into bond-servants the very forces that aroused the superstitious fear of our ancestry. That very power has brought in its pathway new problems, the problems of our progress, problems that are not so novel save in their facts and may yet be confronted with tested principles for solution.

"But there has passed over us a disrespect for age, an affection for the new, merely because it is novel; a dislike for experience because it lingers too much in the past.

"I believe if industry were to express its anxiety tonight when it stands upon the peaks, for the moment, of a satisfactory prosperity, not founded on multiplied production for the waste of war but in answer to the immediate needs of peace, it would realize upon the one hand that the permanent possession of what we immediately have depends so much upon our own capacity for restraint in the enjoyment of it, but depends still more, as we face the future, upon an ability to face the problems that are going to rise each day in this highly complex and delicate industrial machine, in the possession of an informed and instructed and intelligent public opinion—and you gentlemen are the makers of that.

"We shall have new facts presented each day for our consideration, but the trouble of the industrialist is a continuing wonder of whether we are to debate over fundamentals or whether we are to agree upon major premises. If we cannot agree upon that, we agree upon nothing. That, more than all other things, seems the need of this hour.

"We have arrived where we are today; we possess the means at our disposal; we have made progress in the control of these great forces because we have released and rewarded individual effort and secured individual opportunity. If these are to take us forward, they must be protected alike against the arbitrary restraints of mere public interference or the dominating control of private combination.

"Are we for the future to adopt a new principle that government shall interfere wherever it may or that government shall interfere only wherever it must? (Applause.)

"The causes that have brought us into the possession of our present control of social force are plainly visible. They were the animating impulse that organized the nation and inspired the individual factors of its progress, and that progress is to be made not through government but through individuals, for government never invented anything, never administered anything, but it has had to rely upon the individual as the dynamo of social progress.

"We need now a renaissance of faith in the old fundamentals, a belief in the necessity for cultivating and preserving individual self- reliance, and that, gentlemen, you can contribute as the maker of opinion, as the instructor of public thought, as the assembler of facts, as the faithful adherent to the great fundamental principles that your profession has guarded through the history of the nation, and the firm vindication of which it needs today as never before.

"Unfortunately, while we are easy critics of public affairs and public men, there is, alas, that defect in us which your aid can supply—the more active participation in public affairs of men in responsible positions in every-day life. It is easy to criticise, but is seems to me that no business man occupies a helpful position in the political life of the nation if he is not willing to put his shoulder to the wheel and to give his aid to the improvement in office of the quality of men, not only by the offer of his own position, but by the stimulating aid of active participation in public affairs.

"It was George William Curtis, your own great leader of 30 years ago, who pictured the course of government in which men neglected that responsibility and pictured it as a government in which there was not a mastery by ignorance, but a retreat by intelligence, and pointed out that it was not that bad men were brave, but that good men were cowards and infidels.

"So the last word that I would say for industry tonight, if it could speak through my feeble voice to the press, would be to ask for a renaissance of support for fundamental things in American life, a realization of the valu every day affairs of the great impulses have driven us forward, and of the nee again realize them, to bring us within easy possession and control of that prosp that seems this hour within our grasp." plause.)

At this point Lord Robert Cecil escorted into the hall, while the orc tra rendered the selection "God S the King." The next speaker Senator George Wharton Pepper Pennsylvania. He said:

"Mr. Emery spoke of the newspaper as tongue. The newspaper is the tongue of world! If I listen to it, I gain knowledg what the world is thinking and saying and ing. And if I gain not this knowledge I essential equipment for my daily work.

"You people are the nerve centers that trol the tongue, and from this comes unique and almost terrible responsibility, it is your interpretation of what the world and does that is accepted as ultimate fact millions and millions of people. And I pose that the most difficult feat for the tor controller to perform is so to speak as maintain a right relation between people events.

James A. Emery

"If the tongue talks too freely about pe the result is gossip; and if we forget people babble about events and theorize concer their significance, we quickly develop an mosphere of unreality.

"Take, for instance, the three great pu questions that confront America today—t tion, the railroads and foreign relations.

Seriously, ladies and gentlemen, as we

"We make the mistake constantly of thinl that the strangers within our gates are t who come here that we may teach them, wh as the fact is that if we will keep our and ears open, they will interpret to us which has become commonplace, and all too dinary; and I believe that the civilization America, of tomorrow. will be noted more for anything else for this; that it will b composite of all that is best and vital and enduring in the civilizations that we are ass lating.

"There are not many things that are of n vital interest to a man than these. Well, is the collective tongue of American journa to discuss these three great problems? S we place, in the days that are ahead of major emphasis upon the political aspects these questions, or shall we discuss them a strive to relate them to the welfare of all people and sink to secondary place their p cal insignificance to individuals?

"Be just a little more specific for a min Consider the subject of foreign relations. there or is there not grave danger that in months that lie ahead of us, the tongue will so busily respecting parties and platforms candidacies and political fortunes, that there be relatively little time for the discussio the question which after all is the fundam question, namely, what are the facts; an the light of those facts, what is the sen thing for America to do?

"I believe that you agree with me in t ing that our foreign policy must never b complicated thing, beyond the ken of the ma of the American people. We must never ha foreign policy which is a course charted steered only by advance students in diplon navigation.

"Our foreign policy, if it is to be reall American policy, must be simple enough straightforward enough for all to underst I am one of those who believes that for policy, in its last analysis, will be somet like the unanimous verdict of the jury American public opinion.

"Now, if that be so, we refresh our r lection of what has happened in the past, we say to ourselves, 'There are classes of mestic questions respecting which we can a to differ, respecting which parties may afford to align themselves on one side or other; but in our contacts with foreign nat we should strive hard to keep in step.'

"I believe that unanimity in thinking a our foreign problems is most likely to be ized if we lay little stress on the discus of mere machinery and focus our attention the substance of the thing; namely, machi aside, what is the part which we would see America play in the world?

GHER ETHICAL STANDARDS CALLED FOR BY EDITORS' SOCIETY

SHINGTON, D. C., April 27.—T: second annual convention of Aerican Society of Newspaper reopened here today with a repave registration of the leading ie men of the country. The re-loses the fact that there are some or departments of journalism that persons of newspaper experience teaching staffs and that the total amount being expended by another school graduating students in journalism is only $4,500 annually.

The most important business before the meeting, which ends tomorrow, is the action to be taken on adopting a code of journalistic ethics. The ethics committee, under the chairmanship of Harry J. Wright, editor of the New York Globe, has been working, on its assigned task for the past year. It presented the following "Canons of Journalism" to the meeting for consideration:

Canons of Journalism

The primary function of newspapers is to communicate to the human race what its members do, feel and think. Journalism, therefore, demands of its practitioners the widest range of intelligence, of knowledge, and of experience, as well as natural and trained powers of observation and reasoning. To its opportunities as a chronicle are indissolubly linked its obligations as teacher and interpreter.

To the end of finding some means of codifying sound practice and just aspirations of American journalism these canons are set forth:

I.

Responsibility—The right of a newspaper to attract and hold readers is restricted by nothing but considerations of public welfare. The use a newspaper makes of the share of public attention it gains serves to determine its sense of responsibility, which it shares with every member of its staff. A journalist who uses his power for any selfish or otherwise unworthy purpose is faithless to a high trust.

II.

Freedom of the Press—Freedom of the press is to be guarded as a vital right of mankind. It is the unquestionable right to discuss whatever is not explicitly forbidden by law, including the wisdom of any restrictive statute.

III.

Independence—Freedom from all obligations except that of fidelity to the public interest is vital.

1. Promotion of any private interest contrary to the general welfare, for whatever reason, is not compatible with honest journalism. So-called news communications from private sources should not be published without public notice of their source or else substantiation of their claims to value as news, both in form and substance.

2. Unfair political partisanship, even in editorial comment, does violence to the best spirit of American journalism; in the news columns it is subversive of a fundamental principle of the profession.

IV.

Sincerity, Truthfulness, Accuracy—Good faith with the reader is the foundation of all journalism worthy of the name.

1. By every consideration of good faith a newspaper is constrained to be truthful. It is not to be excused for lack of thoroughness or accuracy within its control or failure to obtain command of these essential qualities.

2. Headlines should be fully warranted by the contents of the articles which they surmount.

V.

Impartiality—Sound practice makes clear distinction between news reports and expressions of opinion. News reports should be free from opinion or bias of any kind.

1. This rule does not apply to so-called special articles unmistakably devoted to advocacy or characterized by a signature authorizing the writer's own conclusions and interpretations.

2. Critics of the arts should possess authority based on knowledge, sympathy based on understanding, independence of judgment that demands complete freedom.

VI

Fair Play—A newspaper should not publish unofficial charges affecting reputation or moral character without opportunity given to the accused to be heard; right practice demands the giving of such opportunity in all cases of serious accusation outside judicial proceedings.

1. A newspaper should not invade private rights or feelings without sure warrant of public right as distinguished from public cusicsity.

2. A newspaper has no right to publish a private statement ascribed to its author without his permission.

3. It is the privilege, as it is the duty, of a newspaper to make prompt and complete correction of its own serious mistakes of fact or opinion, whatever their origin.

VII.

Decency—A newspaper cannot escape conviction of insincerity if, while professing high moral purpose, it supplies incentives to base conduct, such as are to be found in details of crime and vice, publication of which is not demonstrably for the general good. Lacking authority to enforce its canons, the journalism here represented can but express the hope that deliberate pandering to vicious instincts will encounter effective public disapproval or yield to the influence of a preponderant professional condemnation.

The convention ends tomorrow night with a banquet, at which President Harding, a member of the Society, will be the guest of honor and speaker.

PUBLISHERS WATCHED RADIO

New Set Demonstrated at Waldorf Suite of Editor & Publisher

Frankness compels, and modesty doesn't inhibit the statement that Suite 116, occupied by EDITOR & PUBLISHER during the conventions at the Waldorf-Astoria, was one of the most attractive spots for publishers on the entire convention floor. Many visited to renew old friendships, others to share a cup of cider, many no doubt wanted information as to where other publishers were stopping, and all of them wanted copies of EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S convention report and rotogravure section.

All of them likewise were deeply interested in the radio demonstration given in the suite by the De Forest Radio Telephone and Telegraph Company, with a Type D-7a reflex radiophone receiving instrument and loud-speaker. The instrument was the latest word in radio apparatus. It is entirely self-contained, with no outdoor aerial, and with three tubes, affords five stages of amplification. Throughout the day, programs broadcast by New York and Newark stations were picked up clearly and at night success was had in reaching more distant stations. The demonstration was in charge of A. G. Nordholm of the De Forest staff.

BETTER ADVERTISING SCHOOLS

Improved Instruction Courses Are Sought by California Association

Improved advertising instruction in colleges is the aim of the California Advertising-Service Association, which held its sixth semi-annual convention at Carmel-by-the-Sea April 12-15.

It is hoped to secure men for agency staffs and executive posts from the advertising graduate classes. Sound training in the fundamentals of advertising as an economic force will be emphasized.

CHANGES IN SYRACUSE

Former Scripps Man Named Publisher of Hearst Papers

Eugene MacLean, formerly with the E. W. Scripps publications in California, has been appointed publisher of the Syracuse Telegram and Sunday American. He succeeds J. A. Easton, who has resigned to take charge of his own publications.

Other changes have taken place on the Syracuse Hearst newspapers. William N. Hardy, formerly managing editor of the Boston Telegram, is now editor of the Syracuse Telegram. Roy Murdoch, who has been managing editor of the Telegram and Sunday American, will now devote his whole time to the Sunday American. William Wayne, head of the copy desk on the Telegram, has been made head of the copy desk of the Baltimore News. Joseph W. Hayes, formerly of the Detroit Times, succeeds Wayne as head of the copy desk on the Telegram. George Blackford, formerly of the Syracuse Journal copy desk, is now with the Telegram in a similar capacity.

William Ross, financial editor of the Telegram, has returned to the staff of the Boston American, and J. W. Broadwell of the financial staff of the Telegram has joined the copy desk of the Baltimore American. Charles Wolff of the Syracuse Journal has joined the staff of the Telegram as a special article writer.

1,119 ADVERTISING COMPLAINTS

Federal Trade Commission Member Reports 450 Orders Issued

Speaking at a luncheon of the New York Council American Association of Advertising Agencies at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York City, April 26, Huston Thompson, member of the Federal Trade Commission, stated that up to April 1 the commission had 1,119 complaints of unfair advertising practice, and that to correct these conditions, 450 orders in all had been issued.

Commissioner Thompson said many complaints had been received of the sale of celluloid products as "jade" and "French ivory."

Veteran Michigan Publisher Dies

Tom A. Hanna, aged 67, veteran publisher of the Michigan Upper Peninsula, died April 23 at Pasadena. He started newspaper work on Detroit and Duluth papers. He went to Iron Mountain, Mich., 35 years ago, and after working awhile on the Iron Mountain Press, bought it and made it one of the leading weeklies of Michigan. After the consolidation of the Press and the Tribune-Gazette into the present Iron Mountain News, he continued on the News editorial staff. His editorial policy on the Press was summed up in a slogan: "You don't have to wear silk suspenders to get your name in this paper." He served several years as State Commissioner of Mineral Statistics. He was a member of the Masonic Order.

A. B. C. AMENDS RULES ON PUBLICITY

Board of Directors and Standard Forms and Audits Committee Take Action at Meeting in New York —New Members Elected

Publicity rules of the Audit Bureau of Circulations were amended by the directors at a meeting in the Hotel Biltmore, New York, April 24, governing the use of the bureau's name or figures in publishers' advertising. One new rule specifies limits on the use of the A. B. C. name or statistics, another rule provides penalties for violation of the first rule, and another requires publishers to keep on file copies of advertised circulation claims, which are to be filed with the working papers of the auditor when making the annual audit. A meeting of the Standard Forms and Audits Committee was held at the bureau's New York office in the morning before the board meeting.

The publicity rule adopted follows:

A Publisher Member of the Bureau is permitted to publish in his own or other publications or in circular form when using the name and authority of the figures of the Bureau.

1. Total net paid circulation on his own publication only.
2. The divisions of net paid circulation as shown in Paragraph 8 of all publishers' statements and audit reports on his own publication only.
3. The first page of either publishers' statement or audit reports on his own publication only.
4. The entire report—either publishers' statements or audit reports on his own publication only.
5. In Directories, use of figures shall be confined to Paragraph 8, but date and whether publishers' statement or audit report as authority, shall always be shown.

Publishers are not permitted to use the Bureau's figures, concerning competitors either through the direct or implied authority of the Bureau in any advertising matter.

Violation of this rule is co the following regulation:

"When a violation of the publ of the Bureau is called to the of the Managing Director, a bull be issued setting forth the facts ing such violation.

"In the event of a repeated after attention has been called violation and a Bulletin issued, t ber shall be cited by the M Director to appear before the Directors to show cause wh should not be taken in conform the By-Laws and Rules and tions."

The entertainment program under the personal direction of Abbot George M. Cohan consisted of about twenty of the star acts of leading Broadway attractions including: Gilda Gray and Follies Girls; Balcony Scene from "Romeo and Juliet" by George M. Cohan and Charlotte Greenwood; Clark & MacCullough and Leila Ricord from the "Music Box Revue;" "The Efficiency Man," an original sketch by Jack Lait; The Muskowitch Quartette; "Breaking into the Papers" under direction of Harold Goldin; "Kitty Kelly and Estelle Levell" from "Cinders;" "Their Just Deserts," a sketch by Jack Lait and John P. WESTINGHOUSE SEES THE LIGHT

Discovers What Newspaper Advertising Can Do in N. Y. Test Campaign and Increases 1923 Appropriation 150%

Along about Thanksgiving, 1922, one of the sales and advertising men of the New York office of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, who had listened to the siren song of some newspaper advertising man, got the big chief to "try out" a tieup campaign—daily newspaper and dealer—for the Christmas trade in Brooklyn.

The idea was theoretically clever—worthy, in fact, of a trial. As designed, each advertisement was to feature the local dealers and tell of some Westinghouse product that would make an appropriate Christmas gift for some member of the family.

In four weeks the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company "sold" twenty-four dealers on the idea, thirteen of them being new dealers and the salesmen reported repeat orders in a very satisfactory volume.

After the advertising stopped the orders fell off materially.

The general result of this tryout is that for the year 1923 the daily newspaper advertising appropriation of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company has been increased some 150 per cent and a nation-wide campaign is being released.

The campaign itself, as outlined by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, will run into something more than a quarter of a million dollars, but that is not all, for dealers are obligated to do some more advertising of their own to back up the campaign, and jobbers, too, are expected to use the daily newspapers. So before the campaign is finished it will probably mean more than half a million dollars to the daily newspapers of the country.

The Cline Electric Manufacturing Company, which has sold its press control equipments to many newspapers, has its apparatus manufactured by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, making a logical tieup in this campaign.

A. N. P. A. COMMITTEE REPORTS

lishers' Association was presented to the Convention by President Freel in executive session.

As a result of the discussion on the subject the Convention passed the Resolution found in the enclosed copy of the fourth day's proceedings of the Convention.

President Freel would be pleased to meet you at some time suited to your convenience in an effort to work out a new agreement if you will let him know your pleasure.

Yours, very truly,
Charles A. Sumner,
Secretary-Treasurer.

The resolution referred to by Mr. Sumner follows:

At the conclusion of morning's executive session deliberations of following resolution was presented to the convention by delegate Garrison, (New York No. 1):

"The Convention has carefully considered the report of the President relative to the negotiation of a new Arbitration Agreement between the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union.

"The Convention instructs the Executive Board to renew the recently expired Agreement for a further period of five years if this is possible.

"The Convention is unwilling to agree to the elimination of Section 9 of the old Agreement, which provided that local and International Laws are not subject of arbitration.

"The Executive Board, with this expression of the Convention in mind, is authorized to resume negotiations with the representatives of the A. N. P. A., and if any agreement can be arrived at within the limits of these instructions, the Executive Board is authorized to accept the Agreement subject to the approval of a referendum.

"Resolution adopted."

No further communication has been had with the representatives of the Union.

The sub-committee met the representatives of the International Typographical Union—John McParland, president, and Walter Barrett, first vice-president—in conference the following day, August 16.

The discussion opened with the statement by President McParland that the union's chief objection to the publishers' revised agreement is its exclusion of the former provisions under which differences relating to matters covered by the union's "International Law" are non-arbitrable, and proposed that inasmuch as the provisions of their laws which apply to their relations with the publishers are so few they might be incorporated in the arbitration agreement itself, if it were found possible to come to an agreement respecting them. He then said that the "reset," or "mat," law was the most important and the most difficult to adjust, and that if an agreement could be had respecting this law the other matters in controversy should be possible of adjustment. He then proposed that they would recommend to their membership an amendment of this law under which its subject would be relegated to the local unions with authority to waive the "reset" requirement provided the working hours of the week were reduced below 48.

Your committee replied that they could not consider the proposition, first on the ground that they had no authority to reduce the working hours, and second that in the view of the publishers the "reset" law is economically wrong, and that it is therefore morally unjust to compel its recognition as against the protests of the publishers whose position is that they are entitled, as a matter of justice and self-respect, to the abrogation of the law without paying a price for it in the way of a reduction of the working hours.

After prolonged discussion the representatives of the union announced that they could go no further toward meeting the demand of the publishers, and asked whether it would be possible to renew the old arbitration agreement for a short term, or until such time as a new one might be agreed upon.

Your committee replied that under the directions of the convention of the association it could only consider negotiation of a new agreement framed in accord with the instructions under which the committee had been appointed. The conference thereupon ended without consideration of any of the other provisions of the international law of the union. The union's representatives stated that the "reset" law would be discussed at their coming annual convention.

No further communication with the union has been had.

After a prolonged negotiation with President George L. Berry of the International Printing Pressmen & Assistants' Union, and its board of directors, the publishers' amended agreement was adopted and received the approval of a referendum vote of the membership of the union.

The publishers' amended arbitration agreement, as executed with the International Printing Pressmen & Assistants' Union, has been submitted to Matthew Woll, President of the International Photo-Engravers' Union for submission to the board of directors of the union. No reply has yet been received.

Respectfully submitted,
Victor F. Lawson, CHAIRMAN.

REPORT OF A. N. P. A. SPECIAL STANDING COMMITTEE

ARBITRATION CONTRACT WITH THE I. P. P. & A. U. AND OTHER INTERNATIONAL UNIONS OF THE PRINTING TRADES

YOUR committee reported at the last annual meeting that the officers of the International Printing Pressmen & Assistants' Union had agreed to negotiate an arbitration contract with the A. N. P. A., providing for the arbitration of all differences, and to recommend the acceptance of such a contract to the members of the pressmen's unions. That agreement has been concluded and covers a period of five years from January 1, 1923, to December 31, 1927. The acceptance of such a contract by the International Pressmen's Union is evidence of the broadmindedness of its officers and members, and testifies to the fact that they have sufficient confidence in the equity of their laws to submit differences respecting them to arbitration and to accept modifications of them if an unbiased arbitrator so decides.

This new arbitration contract is an improvement on previous agreements in many respects, the most important being provision that seven men shall constitute the International Board of Arbitration, thus insuring decisions and preventing deadlocks, which have in many cases in the past proven very unsatisfatcory.

The rule in previous arbitration contracts which required the submission of all books on points at issue, caused considerable controversy, because in some instances local unions tried to misapply this rule by demanding that private and confidential books and reports covering profits and losses be placed before local arbitration boards.

The international board on a number of occasions decided this rule did not require the production of such books and statements, but to avoid controversy on the matter hereafter, the rule was not included in the new abitration contract.

The new agreement is an improvement on previous contracts in other respects, which it is unnecessary to enumerate as copies have been sent all members of the association having union pressrooms, with the recommendation that they inform the officers of the local unions if they wish to execute the new contract.

Copies of the new contract were sent members on March 22, and since then 28 agreements have been executed and nearly every day additional signed contracts are being received by your chairman.

Arbitration contracts have not been made with other International Unions of the printing trades. The committee on new arbitration Agreements will report respecting its negotiations; hence the matter will not be dealt with further at this time by the special standing committee.

ARBITRATION OBLIGATIONS UNDER EXPIRED ARBITRATION CONTRACTS

For many years arbitration contracts have provided that all issues raised under those agreements must be settled as set forth in the said agreements. When it became apparent that new arbitration contracts to succeed those expiring April 30, 1922, would not be made with any International Union prior to that date, our committee arranged with the various International organizations that all issues raised under the expired arbitration contracts would be settled in accordance with the obligations of the said contracts. Therefore there have been a number of arbitrations during the past year. Details respecting these proceedings will be given later. In considering the rights of members under expired arbitration contracts, it was necessary to scrutinize carefully all local agreements and the arbitration obligations they contained. Clauses in local agreements respecting arbitration differ materially in contracts with typographical unions; hence a study was made of all the agreements and a set of questions formulated covering the various arbitration obligations to determine the course to be taken respecting them. It was found there were five different classes of agreements which had some form of arbitration obligation. The questions as finally formulated are as follows: Does the jurisdiction of the International Arbitration Board (including its legal interpretations and decisions) continue until the completion of—

1. Contracts or scales, or either, negotiated under International Arbitration Agreement (or controversies arising thereunder) negotiations of which were completed before the expiration of the arbitration agreements?.

2. Contracts and scales, or either, negotiated under International Arbitration Agreement (or controversies arising thereunder, including questions of new scales during the life of local contracts which provide for periodical consideration of wage scale changes) negotiated after the expiration of the arbitration agreement, but initiated before?

3. Contracts or agreements negotiated under the arbitration agreement either before or after its expiration, the initial issue in which was raised prior to the expiration of said agreement, and the terms of which contracts or agreements provide for negotiations of a succeeding agreement and method for settlement of controversies thereunder?

4. Do those rulings, if agreed to, apply to members of A. N. P. A. not parties to the arbitration agreement, but whose local contracts or agreements include provision for taking advantage of that instrument?

5. Where local contracts or agreements providing for arbitration of subsequent contracts have expired and operations have been continued regardless of their expiration and without formal renewal, does the arbitration obligation continue?

These questions were considered by the directors of the association at a meeting on January 25, and the directors answered "yes" to each query.

The Executive Council of the I. T. U. was informed of this and later advised it answered "yes" to all the questions excepting number three.

Since then it has not been officially accepted by the Council, but that may be done later. When the Special Standing Committee completed its investigation of the contracts containing reference to arbitration, the result was checked by the I. T. U. and a statement prepared jointly. It was found that the various questions respecting arbitration obligations now apply as follows.

No. 1, 91 contracts.
No. 2, 19 contracts.
No. 3, 33 contracts.
No. 4, 2 contracts.
No. 5, 11 contracts.

It should be stated, however, that provisions in some contracts require placing the agreements under more than one classification; hence there is some duplication in the above figures.

LOCAL ARBITRATION AGREEMENTS.

During the year local contracts in many cities in which there were no obligations to arbitrate, expired, and in all such instances mer been advised to propose the making ments to settle pending differences b bitration, and if agreeable, to make for settling future disputes by the sa Your committee supplied a form of c that purpose. Nine of such agreem been signed and all but two accept national laws.

MANY LOCAL CONTRACTS INCLUDE I TIONAL LAWS.

For years local unions have been contract sections making International of agreements. Your committee exam graphical contracts which include s sions, and the result was as follows:

"Out of 252 contracts, 115 covering lishers provide for the observance o tional laws. Of the 115 agreements, 6 76 publishers also specify that local be adhered to. Besides these there a tracts covering 42 publishers that p the observance of local laws only, and covering 30 publishers specify that laws are not subject to arbitration."

FUNDAMENTAL DECISIONS,

During past years the Internation tion Board has made some decisions considered fundamental. Your comm posed to the Executive Council of the that such decisions be considered as of both organizations and the propo accepted with the reservation that if th at any convention adopts any law c any of the fundamental decisions, th tional Union will then hold it is not u gation thereafter to comply with the of any fundamental decision which i to the new law.

One of the important fundamental the Denver decision. This was made and provided that discharged men ne reinstated on demand, but must awai of the "court of last resort." The at its convention in 1922 adopted a la to the reinstatement provision of th decision. It reads:

"In case of appeal against the a subordinate union, its decision mu plied with in the interim. When nate union reinstates a discharge and the right of appeal is exercised man must comply with order of rei pending final decision."

After the Denver decision was committee and the Executive Coun it wise to provide in local contract differences regarding discharged men by local boards and not carried th tedious union processes of appeal to t tive Council of the I. T. U. In where there are such contract provi new reinstatement rule will not app the life of the said contracts. NATIONAL COMMISSION MEMBERS FAVOR 1924 LONDON CONVENTION

But Will Insist on American Delegation Going on American Ship—Two-Day Session in Cleveland Develops Facts and Figures on Advertising

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

CLEVELAND, O., April 25.—Members of the National Advertising Commission of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World during their Hotel Statler two day conference, ended, today expressed themselves in favor of holding the 1924 A. A. C. W. convention in London. In so doing the members said they expressed individual preferences. E. T. Meredith, Des Moines, gave notice that if "I go to London next year to attend a meeting of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World it will have to be in a dry American vessel." Said he, "if this trip is to be made on a wet English boat I will stay at home. It would be a mighty sad commentary upon our respect for our own advertising laws if the advertising men, as a body, should refuse to make the voyage on a dry American ship."

Members of the conference generally echoed Mr. Meredith's views. Final decision on the "on-to-London" movement will be left to the Atlantic City convention of ad clubs.

Mr. Meredith told the conference "the farmer is coming back. The American farmers, collectively," he said, "were worth $2,000,000 more either in money or crops, January 1, 1923, than they were a year before. Last year's crop was worth $2,000,000 more than the year before, which means that prices of agricultural products are generally increasing. Agriculture remains the basic industry of the country and the reason why the cities and towns are more prosperous today than they were a year ago is because the farmer is better off." Mr. Meredith, during the public session Wednesday afternoon, spoke on "The Influence of Agriculture In All Business."

Frank McClure of Chicago, chairman of the commission, presided during Tuesday's executive sessions and the public sessions Wednesday. He said advertising of all kinds, in which more than $2,000,000,000 was invested during 1922, is cheapening production, making better production and raising the standing of living of the American people. He said that there is a constant improvement in business conditions as denoted in the constantly increasing volume of advertising.

"Advertising," Mr. McClure said, "is merely a system of education. It is making an educational contribution to modern society along with the public schools and the university. At the same time, it is the modern miracle that is bringing to the home of the humblest working man better merchandise and more perfect comfort than the world has ever before known.

"Despite the stupendous sum spent for it, advertising has never increased the sale price of any product, but has always lowered it. The cost of advertising per article is so low as to be negligible, since it increases the production of the advertised article and broadens the field of its distribution. The last goods to be increased in price during the war were the nationally advertised products, for very often the advertised product is known by its price as well as by its name."

Mr. McClure pointed out that the "modern tendency in advertising is the elimination of comparative prices and the public is learning that it cannot get something for nothing; it does not want something for nothing, but full value for its money.

He pointed out that the chief aim of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World is to combat "fraudulent advertising." He said more than $500,000,000 is spent annually in newspaper advertising; over $395,000,000 for direct mail advertising; $200,000,000 for magazine advertising; over $150,000,000 on billboard and specialties and $50,000,000 on advertising motion picture films; while many millions more are annually expended on theatre programs and street car advertising.

"The day when a thing could be put over by advertising it has passed," said Mr. McClure. "The better newspapers will not publish fraudulent or misleading advertisements and under Legislation enacted in 34 states, those who use fraudulent advertising can be prosecuted. Similar laws, I believe, will soon exist in every state."

Charles Henry Mackintosh of Chicago reported progress in "The Promulgation of Standards of Practice in Advertising."

E. S. Goldstein, advertising manager of the May Company Department Store, Cleveland, presented a code of ethics which retailers will be asked to adopt. The commission approved the code as presented.

Charles S. Hatfield, secretary and general manager of the St. Louis Convention and Publicity Bureau, discussing "community building through publicity," said the "surface of the community advertising field has hardly been touched." He said the money thus expended has increased in a few years from $80,000 annually to $2,225,000 and in 1923 will exceed $3,000,000. Cities west of the Mississippi alone spend $2,000,000 a year. Some cities are raising funds by direct taxation for such advertising. Baltimore is one. It spent $25,000 last year in advertising.

Mrs. Bernice Blackwood, executive secretary of the Advertising Specialty Association of the United States and president of the Women's Advertising Club of Chicago, said if the women of the country were to "go on strike, refusing to read advertising, most of the manufacturing establishments and mercantile firms would have to go out of business in a very short time." She said "women are the world's greatest advertising readers. They also succeed remarkably as advertising writers and executives. Women are the chief advertising readers because they spend a large part of the family income. They know what advertising appeals to them. Therefore, they know what will appeal to other women. She is the only woman member of the commission."

Homer J. Buckley of the Buckley-Dement Company, Chicago, spoke on "Intensive Advertising Plus Merchandising Vs. Distribution Costs."

G. R. Schaeffer, advertising manager of the Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, discussed "some theories about advertising and their practical application."

Cleveland ministers participated in a conference on church advertising Wednesday morning. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, president of the Church Advertising Departmental of the Associated Advertising Clubs, New York, held the conference and in the afternoon spoke on "Why Advertise the Church?"

The commission members were guests of the Cleveland Ad Club meeting at noon lunch on Wednesday and were taken to Keith's theatre Tuesday night.

President L. E. Holland, of the A. A. C. W., was unable to be present.

George A. Fowler, advertising manager of Colgate & Co., New York, spoke, saying firms like Marshall Field & Co. plan 50 years ahead and Colgate 116 years, or the age of a progressive firm determines the length of a period for future building.

The commission adopted a resolution in favor of an extension of church advertising. Ad clubs were urged to encourage such advertising, to hold conferences with ministers on the subject and appoint a committee of church advertising. Formation of classes for the study of church advertising is urged. Increased attendance in churches it was stated has resulted from church advertising helping to stabilize business, insure prosperity and build up health and character.

News Rotogravure Is Detroits Choicest Medium

IN Detroit, Rotogravure has proved a most effective medium for products as widely varied as breakfast sausage and face creams. Little advertisers using small space—eight or ten inches regularly—have found it paid them unusually well. Bigger advertisers have achieved phenomenal results as was amply shown by the Janay Face Cream campaign.

And it's small wonder. Rotogravure is the most popular section of the Sunday paper. It has had a tremendous part in the growth of The Sunday News circulation which covers all Detroit and a wide trading territory outside. Rotogravure advertising is the most logical medium for national advertisers seeking 100% attention at the smallest proportional outlay. No engravings are required.

During the first three months of 1923, The Sunday News published 4,733 inches of Rotogravure advertising while its nearest competitor printed 2,086, less than half as much.

correspondents who grabbed slices of the President's speech between dashes to the telephone booth may not have recognized Arthur Brisbane, busy with pad and pencil as any of the street men beside him. Mr. Brisbane took lengthy notes on the President's address, and keenly studied President Harding's face throughout the speech. He later said that he had taken the reporter's desk position to gain first hand impressions of the speech. Asked about the news situation he said "One thing is certain—news was never duller than it is today."

JOHN A. PARK of the Raleigh (N. C.) Times believes in good features, and plenty of them. His experience has been that "if we leave out any of our features our people kick." The Times has utilized radio by sending out messages through the big radio plant at the North Carolina State College, but Mr. Park does not consider broadcasting a newspaper essential. "It is a good will asset beyond a doubt," he said, "but I cannot see where it gets real circulation." When asked whether he believed that the use of personals aided circulation in the middle sized city, he said that he believed the day of the personal, per se, to be passing, adding: "People have gotten over the novelty of seeing their names in print. What they want are the news and feature material that will keep them in touch with the world, not only the world of their own town, but the outside world whose news horizons are constantly coming closer to them."

Thirty-two percent of the population of Raleigh consists of colored people, according to Mr. Park. He has built up good will among colored readers by introducing a department of local news about Negroes which runs from half to three quarters of a column daily. The editor of the column is a negro student who collects only material for this department.

COLONEL ROBERT R. McCORMICK of the Chicago Tribune was asked to comment on criticism from editors in smaller towns of the increasing press of foreign news. He expressed the opinion that the editor of the paper in smaller cities was justified in believing that his field lay closer to his own territory, and said that the foreign news was of more dominant interest to the big city men, adding that the town man who wanted world news could obtain it, and generally did obtain it, by subscribing to a big city paper to supplement his home town publication. The out-of-town circulation of the Chicago Tribune, he said, covered 7 states, and added that the Tribune continues to find foreign news of great value, usually obtaining at least one, and often two front page stories daily from correspondents in all parts of the world.

"I AM glad to say we've escaped the bug-bear of radio broadcasting," said M. E. Foster, publisher of the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle. "It is entirely too expensive a way to get good will, and we believe that more good will can be obtained by putting money directly into making a good newspaper. People buy a newspaper for news; when they want entertainment they go to a theatre to get it." The Houston Chronicle has broken all its records for growth during the past year. Full treatment of local, state and national news coupled with a sound feature policy are credited as the cause of gains by Mr. Foster. An eight-page rotogravure section and an eight-page comic section are among the Chronicle's valued departments.

HERBERT BAYARD SWOPE, executive editor of the New York World, condemned tendencies of standardization of newspaper news interest. "Canned news handed out without a background, and presented to the public in newspapers that are sterotyped fabricated models produces characterless ewspapers that look as much alike as one Child's restaurant looks like another," he said.

"AMERICAN business is cheerful all the way through the country. Values are high, and there is no indication that they are inflated. Optimism is the note most noticeable, without discord, both in the United States and Canada." This is the meat of the volume of information collected by Walter H. Savory, personal representative of the vice-president and general manager of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, on his return from an annual trip that has taken him from coast to coast, and put him in touch with local conditions in all parts of the two countries from Florida to British Columbia and Quebec to Los Angeles.

"Industries in the East are practically all working at full capacity," said Mr. Savory. "The resort places of the South and of California have been overrun all winter, with people who have money to spend. Crops in all sections have been satisfactory and available at good prices. Even the cattle country of the plains, hardest hit last year and year before of all localities, is feeling better, and looking for a steady rise of its financial barometer.

"Texas is a veritable caldron of bubbling, effervescing activity. Her oil interests, cement industry, cattle men, cotton growers, are all hustling to keep up with the demands of their clients. The whole West coast from Los Angeles to a couver is teeming with business so that real estate values are at a level. States or Canada. All we need is confidence in our own ability to complete the readjustment processes. Most all of us have that confidence. Newspapers and printers are sharing the prosperity right now, and the signs all point to more, rather than less, printed words. Advertising is being refined, both in verbiage and typography, in publications and all printed matter, and is therefore proportionately effective. This effectiveness is aiding in the maintenance of rates and the permanence of performance.

"Rates are stable. A cut rate in a newspaper is now a curiosity. Present day conditions have made a profitable return necessary, and advertising is no longer an experiment, but rather a nearly exact science. There is more business in advertising management that has put it on a plane equal to the highest. Banking methods, cost systems, standardization looking to better credits and more solid properties are warranting more independence of action than ever before 'upstairs.' Altogether, up and down the length and breadth of the land the outlook is promising and Europe's reconstruction while it might help, if hurried, will not greatly harm North America if only delayed.

"The country needs men—men of ambition—not banditry, but two fisted people to produce crops and get money from the soil. East and West need them, Canada needs them, and there's plenty of room and money ahead for the class that's willing to work for success. Printers of publicity are on a higher grade, industrially and financially, than ever before, and there is every reason to believe present good business will continue or be still further improved."

E. E. E. McJIMSEY of the Springfield (Mo.) Republican is another man who finds features good circulation builders. Interest in foreign news, which has filled an increasing amount of newspaper space since the war, is now waning, according to Mr. McJimsey. He shares the opinion of most editors that the publicity man is an entirely unnecessary citizen.

"I get a mountain of publicity every day," he declared. "And by experience with the outside covers of envelopes containing free puff copy I've learned to sort my mail so that I can throw two-thirds of it in the waste basket without looking at it."

ADOLPH S. OCHS, publisher of the New York Times, was asked his opinion on the idea, frequently expressed by smaller publishers, that foreign news demand was declining. In answer he pointed out that the newspaper in the great cities of the country faced a different situation, and emphasized that there was a continued demand for more and better foreign news.

THE use of foreign news in the smaller city was favored by George Anthony Hough, managing editor of the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard.

"New Bedford has a large foreign-born colony, many residents being Portuguese, Greek, and French Canadians. We have found them highly responsive to foreign news, and in fact their interest has never been keener than it is today. Important developments occur daily throughout Europe, and new citizens who know the old world appreciate being able to keep in touch with affairs involving their former nations, their relatives and friends abroad."

INTERESTING news policies were told of by J. R. Snyder, publisher of the Gary (Ind.) Post-Tribune, who when asked whether the "personal" that builds the circulation of the village and small-town newspaper was useful in larger cities, said that the Post-Tribune endeavors to print at least a full page of society and personal news daily, and has found increased circulation resulting.

Another rule of value of the Post-Tribune is that the week's composition average must show over 50 per cent news matter run daily. Friday's advertising may cut into this, but the average is kept up by increased news space on other days.

A full page of cartoons daily, and use of syndicate feature material are other points that Mr. Snyder believes have helped boost the paper's circulation from 8,000 to 12,500 daily during the past two years. This circulation jump was made in the face of the fact that the Tribune two years ago raised its price from two to three cents.

SYNDICATE features are growing, due to the fact that this is an age of specialization, and the syndicated feature supplies the advantage of a specialist's analysis of a subject, according to Capt. Joseph Medill Patterson of the Chicago Tribune. Capt. Patterson has found a constant and increasing demand for features during the past year.

"NEWSPAPERS of today look too much alike," said Josephus Daniels of the Raleigh News and Observer. "The feature idea will continue, for it takes more brains for an editor to get away from the clever syndicated copy and produce something clever of his own. We must have some features, but not too many, for the need in newspaper work is for individualistic endeavor on the part of a newspaper to supply material that will meet the individual needs of its own clientele."

W. G. CHANDLER, of the Cleveland, O., Press, expressed an opinion on the advertising side, saying "The biggest job that publishers have to do now is to keep advertising down to a point that will prevent an advertising debauch such as brought about the paper shortage of two years ago."

J. W. BAKER, of the Ithaca (N. Y.) Journal-News, is another believer in the policy of news first. "Feature stuff makes for lazy editors," he said. They take away the incentive to go out and dig for the local news people really want. I believe that what people in the middle sized city want is real news, and lots of local news also. We run 12 to 15 columns of local news daily, as against 7 to 8 columns of outside news. We have daily 7 to 8 columns of local correspondence from nearby towns. Our farm editor is a college man with practical farm experience, and daily gives us 2 to 3 columns of material of interest to farmers. Thus we try to tie up directly with the personal lives and immediate interests of our readers."

HARRY CHANDLER, of the Los Angeles Times, does not worry. The Times and Los Angeles were both born lucky, and the oil discoveries that have put Los Angeles county into the class of producing more than one-fifth of the world's oil supply have kept both the Times and the city booming along on the prosperity course so fast they have to hurry to catch up with themselves. Population jumped to over 800,000 last year, and circulation of the Times jumped right beside it with a 14% gain. Advertising rates were raised twice during the year. The Times feels an increasing need for foreign news, particularly news of the Orient, as Los Angeles is taking high place as a Pacific port, and trade and travel daily reach out to farther eastern shores. Features are also being used heavily and profitably, according to Mr. Chandler.

J. P. KNOWLAND, publisher of the Oakland (Cal.) Tribune, is another west coast publisher who is making fast progress on the west's prosperity career, and Oakland's growth and the growth of the Tribune is typified in a new 20-story home now under construction for the newspaper.

"Foreign news is important to a limited extent," said Mr. Knowland, "but I do not find any great reader interest or demand for it. Features are a necessary evil. But the great function of a newspaper is to publish news. We take all the wire services, develop local, state and national news, and hit news hardest all the time. It is what people want, and it really makes a newspaper."

the city dealer consider him first

IF you are a manufacturer coming into the St. Louis market, consider first the city dealer. The amount of your goods that he sells represents the bulk of the business that you will do in this entire market. If you tell him that you are going to create a demand for your product through newspaper advertising, you owe it to him—and to yourself—to reach the greatest possible number of his customers.

You can't do this with one newspaper, nor with two newspapers having largely duplicated circulations. Country circulation produces no business for the city dealer.

You can cover St. Louis only one way; by using the two large, non-duplicating evening papers.

Obituary

MRS. ALLAN DAWSON, for twenty years literary critic of the Globe and Commercial Advertiser and a contributor to current periodicals under the name of N. P. Dawson, died suddenly of a cerebral hemorrhage April 23. Mrs. Dawson was born in Chicago fifty-three years ago and was graduated from the University of Wisconsin. She was married to Allan Dawson in 1894 when he was editor and part owner of the Des Moines Leader. They came to New York in 1903. Mrs. Dawson is survived by her husband, a sister, Miss Elizabeth Perkins, and three brothers, John B. Perkins, publisher of the Sioux City Journal, and Henry A. and Claude F. Perkins, of Los Angeles.

JOSEPH S. BERNOLAK, 63 years old, dean of Polish editors in America, was found dead in a roadside ditch in the outskirts of Buffalo, N. Y., drowned in four inches of water. Mr. Bernolak had been editor of Polish newspapers in Buffalo, Pittsburgh and Chicago. He was regarded as an authority on translation of the Polish and Austrian languages. He was a member of the Austrian nobility.

ANDREW J. LANNES, formerly editor and publisher of a number of Swedish newspapers in this country, is dead at his home near Jamestown, N. Y., at the age of 62 years.

FRANK HURD, 76 years old, owner and publisher of the Medina (N. Y.) Tribune, died April 20 of injuries received when he was struck by an automobile. A widow and three brothers survive.

FRANK ALBERT WARWICK, sports writer on the Ottawa (Ont.) Journal, died recently of tuberculosis. He was an authority on soccer.

JEAN OLIVER LAFERRIERE, for several years a member of the editorial staff of the Hull (Que.) Echo and author of the book, "Compagnon du Chantier," died recently at the age of 65.

JAMES POWER, who founded the Bellingham Bay Mail in 1873, then the only newspaper north of Seattle, and who for many years published the Puget Sound Mail at La Conner, Wash., died near La Conner on April 15. He was once collector of customs and U. S. commissioner in Washington and during territorial days was a member of the legislature and of the state constitutional convention.

BERNARD A. CORR, said to be the oldest newspaper man in Boston, died recently at Roxbury, Mass., at the age of 95. For twenty-five years he was commercial editor of the Boston Journal after having earlier worked on the publication of the Shipping and Commercial List. He later became stock market reporter for the Boston Chamber of Commerce and editor of that body's Chamber of Commerce circular, from which he resigned in 1916. He leaves a wife, son and two daughters.

FRED M. ("Lone Star") HANS, 62, night watchman for the Omaha (Neb.) World-Herald, was crushed to death in an elevator accident on April 17. Mr. Hans was an old Indian scout and was noted as a "two gun" expert in his time. He was author of the book entitled "The Great Sioux Nation," published several years ago.

V. F. CHASE, well-known newspaper editor and publisher of Minnesota, died April 4 at Van Buren. He was 84 years old.

MRS. LUCY LINDSAY, mother of the late Richard H. Lindsay, who until his death several years ago was Washington correspondent of the Kansas City Star, died in St. Louis recently as the result of burns received when her home caught fire. Mrs. Lindsay was 95 years old.

GEORGE WAGNER, co-founder, with his brother, B. A. Wagner, of the Arkansas City (Kan.) Daily Dispatch in 1885 and for five years editor of the Topeka (Kan.) Democrat, died at Topeka recently, following a short illness.

WILLIAM HOWARD WEBSTER, secretary and manager of the Caxton Printing Company, Cleveland, died April 20. He has been engaged in the printing and engraving business since 1894, and was one of the founders of the Caxton Company, which was organized in 1902. He was a member of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, Master Printers' Association, the Cleveland Engravers' Club and other commercial and social organizations. He was born in Grafton, Can., in 1870.

WILLIAM J. CARMODY, the oldest member of the Knickerbocker Press chapel of Albany (N. Y.) Typographical Union No. 4, died Sunday, after a brief illness. Mr. Carmody began work when a boy as a printer on the papers that have since been consolidated into the Press and worked continuously for forty-six years. He was for many years foreman of the Press composing room.

FRANK D. HASKELL, at one time western representative of the American Wood Pulp Corporation, died recently at Kalamazoo, Mich., aged 70 years. During the early eighties Mr. Haskell was a professor on the faculty of Kalamazoo College.

MISS MOLLIE CARPENTER, owner and publisher of the Placerville (Cal.) Democrat, died in Oakland, April 12. Miss Carpenter was a delegate to the last Democratic national convention.

SEELY P. MOUNT, engaged in the printing business in Cleveland for 56 years and president of the S. P. Mount Printing Company, is dead at the age of 76 years. He was a member of the Army and Navy Post and formerly department commander of the Ohio G. A. R.

J. S. ALLING, aged 60, for the past 13 years iron range and northwest editor of the Duluth Herald, is dead.

MRS. ADALIZA DAVIDSON, widow of Capt. James E. Davidson, formerly editor of the Monticello (Ia.) Express, died recently in Florida.

MICHAEL F. HENNESSY, aged 53, lawyer and son of the late Michael Hennessy, who was first commercial editor of the New York Times, died April 23 in Brooklyn.

FRANK BEAVER, who edited the Bemidji (Minn.) Daily Pioneer during the World War, is dead at Kankakee, Ill.

COMMODORE J. L. STEWART, aged 72, Canadian yachtsman and editor of the Chatham (N. B.) World, died in Melrose, Mass.

CHARLES DALY, for 27 years on the New York Herald and recently with the New York American, died April 19 in New York. He is survived by his widow and a brother, John Daly, of the Brooklyn Eagle. He was a member of Web Pressmen's Union No. 25.

"JACK" CARNEY, aged 42, died April 7 of pneumonia, after a quarter-century of newspaper work in Chicago. He started as a reporter, but ended in charge of the night tube service of the City Press Association.

WALTER M. WOOD, at one time managing editor of the Honesdale (Pa.) Citizen, and later Wayne County Treasurer at Honesdale, died recently. He served in the Civil War with a New York State unit. He was formerly one of the best-known men in politics and journalism in northeastern Pennsylvania.

JAMES U. SANDERS, secretary of the Montana State Historical Society and of the Society of Montana Pioneers, author of "Montana Yesterdays," a daily summary of historic events, died in Helena, April 17, of injuries suffered in an auto accident. "Montana Yesterdays," issued by the Associated Press, was published by most of the Montana dailies.

ADVERTISING GAIN

920,000 LINES

MILLION

350,000 Line Gain in National Advertising - Same Period

WRITING of a MILLION-LINE GAIN IN LOCAL ADVERTISING gives us a thrill. We do not expect you to have our same enthusiasm. But our million-line gain in local advertising concerns you, and is important to you because it is indicative of the strides being made in the National Capital by The Washington Times. It shows progressiveness,—It Is Keeping Up With The Times, as it were.

A newspaper cannot gain one million lines in local advertising in a year without having the confidence of local advertisers. This confidence cannot be secured by conversation—the local advertiser is on the ground where he can check results almost daily. Advertising confidence in a newspaper is measured only by so many dollars returns against so many dollars invested.

A gain of 350,000 lines in national advertising is also an achievement worthy of thought. This, too, shows a confidence in The Washington Times, for the number of national advertisers listing Washington, and The Washington Times during the past year, has increased steadily.

Washington is recognized as one of the strategical advertising and selling points in the country. As a try-out market, it is ideal. The combination of The Washington Times, evening, and The Washington Herald, morning and Sunday, at an attractive combination rate, offers complete coverage at the lowest line rate per thousand. This combination represents massed circulation far greater than the number of homes in the National Capital.

When the calendar year of 1923 is closed, gains that will be made by The Washington Times will prove one of the sensations in the newspaper world. These gains are not confined to advertising, because The Washington Times' circulation is moving along with the whole organization.

The Washington Times has a Merchandizing Department that REALLY functions. As an information and Service Bureau, it is placed at the disposal of any advertiser who wants to do greater things in the Capital City.

20,000 Gain in Daily Circulation of

IN November, 1922, when The Washington Herald was bought by Mr. William Randolph Hearst, it was necessary to cut its circulation to 30,000 in order to put it on a net paid basis. Since that time, The Washington Herald has gained over 20,000 daily circulation. It was absolutely impossible for The Washington Herald to create 20,000 new readers to a morning paper. This 20,000 increase in readers had to come from somewhere. The last Postoffice Statement, and the A. B. C. Statement for the period ended March 31, will prove interesting to advertisers who believe that There Is No Substitute for Circulation.

The Washington Herald is an ideal medium for advertisers having a product adapted peculiarly to the morning field. Bought in combination with The Evening Times, the unit gives a greater circulation at a lower line rate per M than any other Washington paper.

The combination circulation of The Herald and Times in the Postoffice Statement just filed, shows 117,000 circulation—6,000 more circulation in Washington and suburbs than there are families.

When The Washington Herald was bought by Mr. Hearst, its Sunday issue was merged with that of The Sunday Times under the name of The Sunday Times-Herald. On Sunday, April 22, the name of the Sunday issue was changed to The Washington Herald. This change was in name only. The editorial contents will remain the same. The circulation of The Washington Herald Sunday is 140,000. This at 10c against 5c competition. The Sunday Herald has nearly as much circulation as the other two Washington papers put together, and they sell at 5c. As long as the law of averages holds true, buying circulation will be the thing to do. If you increase the number of readers, you automatically increase the number of prospects. The Hearst unit in Washington gives you more readers and more prospects at a lower line rate per M.

EXPERT ADVICE ON WANT ADS, THEME OF TWO NEWSPAPER BOOKLETS

Classified Departments of St. Louis Globe-Democrat and Indianapolis News Sponsor Interesting Treatises —Other Classified Notes

By C. L. PERKINS

Executive Secretary, National Association Newspaper Classified Managers

THE classified departments of two newspapers have recently issued booklets that are original and interesting. Both are worth mentioning because the ideas behind them have never been treated in this way and because they are well executed.

One, published by the classified department of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, C. W. Nax, classified advertising manager, is entitled "27 Helpful Hints." It contains thirty-six pages and cover. The page size is about 4 by 8½ inches. Twenty-six of the pages each contain a suggestion as to how want-ads can be profitably employed. Each of these pages contains an illustration at the top, then the suggestion, followed by a reproduction of a want-ad from the classification mentioned. Many of the pages dwell on the desirability of reading want-ads, some on the profit to be gained from buying want-ads, and some combine both ideas.

The twenty-seventh suggestion is that it will be profitable to read the Globe-Democrat want-ad section each morning. It is followed by this:

"Buyers vs. Sellers

"The foregoing hints have shown you how to profit by what the other fellow is spending for want-ads. It is well to remember, however, that it is not a one-sided proposition. The advertiser profits just as well as the person who answers his ad. Consistent users of the want-ad section are buyers one day and sellers the next.

"The want-ad section of your daily newspaper constitutes one of the greatest markets in the world. It is a meeting ground where buyers and sellers can get together and exchange both articles and services to their mutual advantage. It is accessible to you every morning in your Globe-Democrat. Are you using it to its fullest extent?"

This is followed by pages devoted to the proper writing of a want-ad, reasons for using the Globe-Democrat, rate rules, and form order blanks. The booklet was mailed to every telephone subscriber in St. Louis.

H. G. Barringer, classified manager of the Indianapolis News, is the producer of the other booklet. It is entitled "Why Is It Done That Way?" and explains the reasons for the News' policy of not using illustrations, broken columns and display type in its classified columns. The booklet, printed on a high-grade stock, contains twelve pages and cover and is copyrighted. The page size is 8½ by 11 inches.

The introduction, in part, says:

"The supreme purpose of the classified section is to render service, and the maximum service alike to reader and advertiser.

"No newspaper can do this if it permits advertisers to run display copy in the classified section. There are definite and understandable reasons why:

"1. Cuts, borders, double-column advertisements, and heavy display type destroy the easy reference qualities of the classified pages. This results in an impairment of the service of these pages to the reader, and a corresponding decrease in his interest.

"2. Reader interest in the classified columns is vital. Otherwise there can be no results. Hence, a decrease in the service rendered to the reader by the classified columns brings a gradual decrease in interest, because the reader is unable to fulfill his wants. For the benefit of all classified advertisers, reader interest in the News classified columns must and shall be maintained.

"3. When other advertisers use display type, borders, illustrations, and larger two-column advertisements, you are forced to do the same to compete with them. That necessitates the use of more space and hence more money in many cases than you are justified in spending to get a required return. You cannot spend what you want to advertise a certain car, you must spend what other advertisers and lax restrictions for the classified pages force you to spend. With the classified section built on strict directory lines you advertise your bargain, yourself, in your own way, as heavily as you wish, without being forced to extend yourself in unnecessary space because of competition.

"4. The experience of other classified advertisers and other newspapers in various cities proves this. Further on in this folder are the actual figures. Newspapers which build their classified columns in the 'directory' style, like the Indianapolis News, have more individual advertisers, using more space, and produce greater results per dollar expended for the advertiser. Whenever a newspaper permits its classified advertisers to compete with each other with display classified copy, it loses ground—decreased number of advertisers, lowered interest, loss of pulling power, and in the end lessened service to reader and advertiser —everything sacrificed for a temporary gain in space."

This is followed by reproductions of want-ad pages from the Chicago Daily News, Detroit News, Minneapolis Tribune and Baltimore Sun, together with letters from the classified managers of each of these papers stating their reasons for confining their want-ads to single columns without large display type or illustrations.

WHEN an efficiency expert enters a plant with a view of improving its methods, one of his first steps is to inquire who is the best and fastest worker in the particular department under scrutiny. Then he studies that operative's methods closely with a view of bringing the rest up to the same standard. Acting upon the same principle this is the result of an interview with one of the ablest salesmen of newspaper space in the country, a man who was for years high man of an organization which owned 30 dailies. Although he is a display man, the same fundamentals apply very largely to selling classified.

"Why is it that you can sell more space than any man on your entire chain of papers?" he was asked. "Is it your canvass, your personality, your eloquence, or what is the factor that puts you where you are?" He smiled.

"It's certainly not my canvass," he replies, "for I have no set speech. Nor is it personality, for I am not particularly popular personally. Nor is it eloquence, for I am notoriously abrupt of speech. No, I think it figures down to two factors.

"I know merchandising thoroughly and can talk to my customers from a behind-the-counter viewpoint. And I give them a vigorous, forceful talk that registers. This sounds strange, but I believe that too many salesmen are too pleasant. I've got something on the ball when I put it across, and though a man may resent my earnestness at the time, when I get through with him he certainly knows he's been solicited. I believe in my own paper thoroughly, and it's by driving home my own convictions that I convince my prospect. Often I am conscious that I may be offending a man by my vigor in combatting his cherished prejudices regarding the comparative merits of the various local media, but I'd a good deal rather risk a row than to waste precious hours in pleasant conversation about the chances of the home team. More than once I've left a prospect in a somewhat irritated frame of mind to find him all cooled down on my succeeding call and ready to talk business.

"To sum it up. Know your prospect's problems and advance some sound business building ideas to solve them. Then put your points across as though you meant them. Dominate the interview. I don't mean that advertising requires a strong closer who'll force a 'Yes' from the man. A one-time sale is useless in this field. But I do mean that from observation I've concluded that most salesmen have too much the attitude of requesting a favor; not enough that of proclaiming the truth. 'I'm here to help build your business with the aid of my paper.' I know I can do it—and here's why; that should be the salesman's attitude. Develop a positive, earnest manner. It will compel respect for your assertions. It is not necessary to ... gressive. But it's easier to tone do... over-aggressive manner than t... power into a flaccid talker."

CIRCULATORS ARE WARNED AGAINST DANGERS OF CUTTING SELLING PRICES

New York State Meeting at Albany Also Emphasizes Necessity of News and Circulation Departments Working Closely Together

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

ALBANY, April 21.—The semi-annual convention of the New York State Circulation Managers' Association at the Ten Eyck Hotel April 19 and 20 for a discussion of the problems incident to the sale and distribution of newspapers, was productive of several excellent papers by the members. One of the important subjects was "Mail Circulation," by W. C. Hixson, circulation manager of the Syracuse Post Standard, in which he called attention to practices which are of recent growth, cut-rate subscription rates to mail subscribers.

F. S. Levy
Pres. N. Y. S. C. M. A.

"In the promotion of mail subscriptions, costs have apparently been lost sight of by some newspapers of Northern New York, which have jeopardized the newspaper industry," he said. "A rate of $3 a year has been offered mail subscribers while the wholesale price to agents is $6.26. All members realize that the handling of newsprint required in the daily issue costs the publisher about $4.50 a year and the mailing charge for the local zone is $2, to say nothing of clerk hire, imperfect copies and other costs. Some may call this promotion but if the practice is continued, in the long run it will be the ruination of newspapers. Mail rates at less than wholesale cost tends to destroy the reader's confidence.

"Little do the publishers realize that they at once force some other publisher to meet the price and in turn the morning newspapers compete at a mail rate lower than the agency selling price in evening agency towns. We appreciate that the mail service advantage is with the morning newspapers, whereas, the evening publisher's advantage is through the agents. The same reason which prompts cut prices also prompted Bull Dog editions. These editions were first sent into R. F. D. sections by the evening newspapers that they might seemingly compete with morning editions. After a time the reading public learn that they are being deceived, apparent advantages disappear, and to retake some small seeming advantage, the cut rate of less than production cost is used that circulation marks may be maintained. The old theory that circulation pays for white paper and distribution costs is disappearing, and weakened newspapers are bound to come. On the 'dog eat dog' competition basis, sooner or later someone gets hurt. First the newspaper does not pay a return to its owner. Second, salaries are reduced so that real men leave for other lines of effort.

"The striking and outstanding success in newspaper making was achieved upon news value and reader interest. It is needless to cite these facts. Even though newspapers may not have quite the circulation of some other issue, they are able to enjoy higher advertising rates and readers' confidence, such as can only be enjoyed by having and giving readers' value. So that in considering the thought of promotion for mail subscribers, I would like to sell the idea of a just price and real newspaper to this association."

"Co-operation of Circulation and News Departments as Essential to the Growth of Circulation" was the subject discussed by Glen S. England, circulation manager of the Leader-Republican of Johnstown. Mr. England summed up his paper in opening when he said: "In every modern business plant of whatever nature there is today a very marked tendency to so co-ordinate the work of the various departments or divisions that each will perform its function in direct harmony with all other departments and the success of any enterprise, be it manufacturing, newspaper or any other business, depends directly upon the degree in which all its divisions co-operate, or, if I may use the expression, 'pull together.'

"The well organized and efficient newspaper of the present, like every other business enterprise, has its sub-divisions or departments, each under its own head in whom rests the responsibility for the success or failure of his particular phase of the enterprise. If we, for the sake of comparison, liken the newspaper business to that of a manufacturing plant, we would call the news department the manufacturing end and the circulation department the distributing end. It has often been said that a good article and one which the people want will sell itself. The primary function of a newspaper is to print the news of the day and get it distributed as quickly as possible to as large a number of readers as possible. With the larger city dailies where there is keen competition and where street sales figure very largely in the circulation, it would seem that speed is a primary essential. Speed in getting the news together and into print and speed in getting the papers into circulation. Cover the city or the area in which the newspaper circulates within the shortest time consistent with good service. Here, then, is one point in which the news editors and the circulation managers may co-operate to the mutual benefit and to the general benefit of the newspaper. With the break of an important news story a 'beat' scored by the news department would lose its significance if the circulation manager did not get the 'headliner' to the public in advance of its competitors.

"In the smaller communities where there are perhaps only a single morning and a single evening newspaper in the field, the matter of time plays an equally important part. In such communities regularity is of importance and the news and circulation departments should so co-operate as to have a definite and regular time for coming off the press and delivery. This item of prompt and regular service is essential to the growth of circulation. If the news department makes a specialty of certain kinds of news, it rests with the subscription canvassers to call attention to such features. Here the circulation men have an opportunity to display their salesmanship. Find out what kind of news your prospect takes particular interest in and then show him how your paper is especially suited to his taste. The circulation men can as a result of their canvasses make known to the news department what the popular features are, and the editors will be in better position to give the public what it wants. Although it is not good policy for the circulation men to 'butt in' too strongly into the news editors' end of the business, or vice-versa, there certainly is nothing lost to the general success of the enterprise when a friendly basis of understanding is established and maintained between the circulation and news department heads.

"In smaller cities, particularly, there are occasions when the collector or circulation men are asked to have certain items of news publisher or are given a news story by someone who is not too familiar with the department workings of a newspaper. If it is a small item, handle it, but if beyond your capability of handling or you have difficulty in getting all the facts correctly see that a reporter is assigned to it. If you see something or hear of something that you think is news, it is good policy to 'tip' off the editorial room. Don't take it for granted that reporters will see or hear of it. It may be the particular thing they have missed. On the other hand reporters are frequently called upon to render some service which concerns the circulation department. Just because you are working on one particular phase of the newspaper business, don't shun that which touches on another phase. It is just such friendly and helpful co-operation between the circulation and news departments which is essential to the growth of a newspaper. Although I have touched only briefly on a few of the essential features of co-operation in newspaper work the matter of co-operation applies as well to all other departments of a newspaper."

James McKernan, manager of the circulation department of the New York World, spoke on the subject of "Premiums and Contests." The speaker said his remarks would be based on observation rather than experience as his efforts in increasing circulation has been solely on the merits of his newspaper, which gives a circulation of a more lasting and permanent quality. "However," he said, "there are numerous instances where the appeal for increased circulation must be made through other channels, and under these circumstances, I am in favor of both premiums and contests. Premiums and contests to a newspaper are like tonics or medicine to a man. If he needs them they are very good for him to take, but if he does not he had better leave them alone.

"After everything is said and done, it is really up to the man on the spot to decide whether or not the circulation needs a stimulant other than given by the editorial and reportorial force, and in the last analysis, what the circulation manager is looking for is increased circulation, and whatever legitimate means will attain that end, he is justified in utilizing them."

A question box discussion also brought up many other timely subjects for general discussion.

The Business of Representing Newspapers is a REAL Business

Newspaper representation calls for intelligence, industry, integrity. It demands knowledge of the fundamentals of advertising, an acquaintance with advertisers and the confidence and good will of advertising agents.

The newspaper representative must know the markets that his papers cover and he must sell this knowledge to the advertiser and the advertiser's agent. His information must be timely, accurate and comprehensive.

In his work exaggeration, guess work, misinformation can have no place.

We are very proud of the business we are in, of the class of men that have been drawn to this business, of the fine capable advertising salesmen who, for the most part, represent newspapers in the East and in the West.

And to publishers generally we suggest that they know more intimately the work their representatives are doing to develop national advertising for newspapers and that they give this work more serious thought, more efficient cooperation so that business of the best class may come to newspapers in increasing volume.

BALTIMORE WELCOMES W

Mayor Broening said:

"Mr. Hearst, Baltimore appreciates the confidence you show in assuming the ownership of The American and The Baltimore News, and this evidence of your faith in the city's future possibilities. . . .

Baltimore is a city of some 780,000 inhabitants, having by the latest census report supplanted Boston as seventh city, and now has an area of 92 square miles, 61 of which were added some four or five years ago. At the close of the war it ranked about eighth among American ports in the matter of regular sailings. Today it is the third largest port in the United States. . . . May I stress the fact that the financial condition of Baltimore compares favorably with the other cities of the United States? In fact it is the most economically governed of all the large cities of the country. . . .

So you will see that when I say we welcome you to Baltimore, it is not merely perfunctory. It is the sincere appreciation of what it means to Baltimore to have you, the publisher of many newspapers, choose our city as the scene of your most recent enlargement in this respect. In this spirit we bid you a most cordial welcome, assure you of our co-operation and wish for you the success that such worthy endeavors deserve."

MR. WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, new owner of The Baltimore News and the Baltimore American, replying to the addresses of welcome made at a dinner given him on Tuesday, April 10, by Mayor William F. Broening, said:

"I desire to say a word of sincere thanks for the very kind and encouraging welcome which has been extended to all of us here in Baltimore.

I know how important a city Baltimore is industrially, commercially, financially, politically—how important a part it plays in the life and economy of the nation. And what I did not know of Baltimore I have learned from the very able and enlightening address of Mayor Broening.

I naturally, therefore, have much satisfaction in being able to possess a newspaper in this city.

And there is another reason for gratification. Baltimore is a great Southern city, and my people were Southerners. The Hearsts, my father's people, came from South Carolina. The Appersons, my mother's people, came from Virginia. And whenever I acquire a paper in the South I feel in a sense as if I were returning to the home of my forebears.

But I know that the important thing is not how I feel about coming to Baltimore, but how Baltimore feels about it.

I do not want my friends in Baltimore to be in the state of mind of a Western friend of mine who when he received a letter marked "Important" looked at it quizzically and said:
"Yes, important to him, but not to me."

I know that I can only show my appreciation of the generous welcome extended here by earnest and effective service to this city and its citizens.

I know, too, that Baltimore does not lack good and faithful service from the newspapers published here. I know how high those journals stand in the journalism of the nation. I know how capable and conscientious are the men who conduct those journals; how effective their service to the citizenship.

But there is one form or phase of service which conditions may enable me especially to perform, and which I hope I shall often have the opportunity to render to Baltimore; that is, to unite the power and influence of the various publications which I have here and there at important points throughout the country in support of the things which Baltimore or any one of those localities desires and requires.

In conclusion, let me say a brief word of the intent and character of my publications.

LIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

You have probably sometimes heard them described as extremely radical. I do not think that they are. I do not think that I am very radical. Indeed, I sometimes think that as I have grown older and slowed down a bit I am really not radical enough.

The policies for which I and my publications fought, and in fighting got the reputation of being radical, have nearly all been accomplished—and, being in successful operation, are no longer regarded with apprehension.

It is ancient history now to refer to the election of Senators by the people. That policy did not rend the structure of government to its foundations, as timid conservatism predicted; nor did woman's suffrage destroy the fabric of society; nor have direct primaries upset the balance of our political processes.

In fact, the chief objection to direct primaries is that political processes are not sufficiently different in the States that have direct primaries and those which have not.

So that I do not at all feel that I am too radical, and my only fear is that a more valid criticism might be that I am somewhat of a back number.

Indeed, I do go back for my political inspiration to the days of Lincoln and his declaration for a government "of the people, by the people and for the people," and further back yet to the days of Jefferson and his declaration in favor of a government "for the greatest good of the greatest number", and still further back to the time of Washington and his appeal for a government free to serve the best interests of our own people without foreign "entanglements" or alliances of any kind.

As a matter of plain fact, I am in some things an utter conservative, determined to conserve, as far as I possibly can, those principles and policies of the fathers which for so many years have made our country the freest and the happiest, the most prosperous and the most powerful nation upon the face of the earth.

There is, however, one firm principle of mine which may be regarded by some as radical, but which to my mind is merely a matter of professional journalistic ethics—of common journalistic honesty.

That principle is the right of the public to a square deal on all occasions—to a fair show for its "white alley." I consider a newspaper to be the retained attorney for the public, and I believe a newspaper which is faithless to that trust is as much of a traitor as an attorney who betrays the interests of the client who employs him.

This may be radicalism, but it is constructive radicalism, conservative radicalism.

It makes for the preservative of our liberties, the protection of our properties and the perpetuation of our American institutions."

Governor Ritchie said:

"I feel that we should all welcome Mr. Hearst to this State with the confidence that he will become one of us, and that he will exert his influence as a great and successful publisher in co-operation with the best citizenship of the State for the State's civic, industrial and financial development, for the maintenance of living and working conditions upon the highest plane possible, and for the preservation of those fine traditions which justify the pride we have in being Marylanders. We want to work with him for these ends, and we are glad in the confidence that he wants to work with us in the same way.

I think the entire appearance of the American shows this. It is no small task to make so complete a change in the makeup of a great newspaper, and those responsible for it are certainly to be congratulated on the way in which they have done their work. The paper is breezy, interesting, clean and complete. I am particularly impressed with the brevity and conciseness of the news items and with the large amount of space devoted to business and finance.

The paper gives every promise of a publication which will print the news fearlessly and accurately, and which will stand behind every movement for the good of our people. As such I welcome it, and wish the new management all possible success."

PRESIDENT TAKES WORLD COURT FIGHT TO PRESS

ago I returned from a southern vacation and picked up a copy of a friendly publication and in a story on the first page was the statement that during my trip south I had broken eight of my golf sticks and was in the process of having them replaced. (Laughter.) Now, that was not very serious to the country, but it put me out of the duffer class and in among the dubs, and I resented it. (Laughter.) Nobody breaks eight golf sticks in five weeks. It cannot be done. (Laughter.) And yet, as one of the three golf-playing Presidents, I have been crucified as a destroyer of sticks, eight in number in five weeks.

"During the closing days of the last session of Congress," he swung into his prepared address, "I sent to the Senate a communication asking its advice and consent to the adherence by the government of the United States to a protocol establishing an international court of justice.

"Out of this simple, natural, normal proceeding had developed so much of mystery and so much of misunderstanding and so much of protest and approval and so much of threatened muddying of the political waters that I welcomed this opportunity on so appropriate an occasion to reveal to the American people both the purpose and the motives impelling.

"Ours is popular government through the agency of political parties, and it must be assumed that because of the successful party, which is at the same time an honest party, must be fairly charted by the platform of that party and by the utterances of the candidates when appealing for popular approval.

"And, on that assumption, it is seemly to recall now the declarations of the party in power relative to the promotion of international relationships. As a matter of fact, our republic began its expansion of influence and participation in world affairs under the gentle and martyred McKinley, and in his days political parties were beginning to speak of arbitration and promoted international friendships and expanded influence.

"In 1904 the national platform of the Republican party said, 'We favor the peaceful settlement of international differences by arbitration.' Four years later, the national convention of 1908, the party in its platform alluded to the progress made in keeping faith with the previous declaration and said, 'the conspicuous contributions of American statesmanship to the cause of international peace was strongly advanced in the Hague conferences, which occasions very just pride and gratification. We endorse such achievement as the highest duty of a people to perform and proclaim the obligation of further strengthening the bonds of friendship and good will with all the nations of the world.'

"Then in 1912, the Republican national platform made a very substantial declaration related to an international court of justice, and I quote again from the party covenant of faith, 'Together with peaceful and orderly development at home the Republican party earnestly favors all measures for the establishment and protection of the peace of the world and for the development of closer relations of the various nations of the earth. It believes most earnestly in the peaceful settlements of international disputes and in the reference of all controversies between nations to an international court of justice.'

"The next formal and solemn pledge was made in 1916. I quote again: 'The Republican party believes that a firm, consistent and courageous and foreign policy always maintained by Republican presidents in accordance with American traditions is the best and it is the only true way to preserve peace and restore to us our rightful place among the nations. We believe in the peaceful settlements of international disputes and favor the establishment of a world court for that purpose.'

"In 1920 the question of our foreign relations was very acute. The Senate had rejected the Versailles Treaty and the League of Nations pact. The convention at Chicago voiced its approval of the rejection, but was unwilling to pledge aloofness from the world. Therefore it said in its platform pronouncement: 'We pledge the coming Republican administration to such agreements with other nations of the world as shall meet the full duty of America to civilization and humanity in accordance with American ideals, without surrendering the right of the American people to exercise its judgment and its power in favor of justice and peace.'

"As a participant in the making of some of these platforms and as the banner bearer in one campaign, I have the right to believe they spoke the party conscience so plainly that it is not easy to misconstrue. But there are other utterances which it is seemly to recall. I allude to the interpretation of the candidate in 1920. On August 28, 1920, speaking on the League of National proposal, I said frankly and very definitely I did not favor the United States entering the League of Nations. It was declared then that the issue as defined between the candidates 'involved the disparity between a world court of justice supplemented by world association for conference on the one hand and the counsel of the League on the other.' And quoting further from the same address I recall that I said 'the one is a judicial tribunal to be governed by fixed and definite principles of war without passion or prejudice. The other is an association of diplomats and politicians whose determinations are sure to be influenced by considerations of honest expediency and national selfishness. One a government of laws and one a government of men.'

"And in that same address I commended the Hague Tribunal. One paragraph is particularly appropriate to refresh. I quote: 'I believe humanity would welcome the creation of an international association for conference and a world court, whose verdicts on justiciable questions this country, in common with all nations, would be willing and able to uphold. The decision of such a court, or the recommendations of such a conference, could be accepted without sacrificing on our part, or asking any other power to sacrifice one iota of its nationality.'

"So much for the political party history. I have quoted it because I believe in keeping the faith. If political parties do not mean what they say, and if political candidates do not mean what they say, then our form of government, our form of popular government, is based on fraud and cannot hope long to endure. (Applause.)

"In compliance with its pledges the new administration which came into power in March, 1921, definitely and decisively put aside all thought of the United States entering the League of Nations. It does not propose to enter now (Applause.) by the side door, or the back door, or the cellar door. (Applause.)

"I have no unseemly comment to offer on the League. If it is serving the old world helpfully, more power to it. I would welcome the demonstration of its utility in a condition which loudly calls for help.

"But, it is not for us.

"The Senate has so declared, the executive has so declared, the people themselves have so declared.

"Nothing could be stamped more decisively with finality.

"And in the further keeping of the faith, the administration made a treaty of peace with Germany, a just treaty, which so impressed our wartime enemy that when we came later on to set up a mixed claims commission to settle the claims of American nationals against Germany, that nation named one commissioner, we named one, and then for the first time in the history of international relationships, Germany asked us as a contending nation to name the umpire, the third member whose vote would decide all differences.

"I know of no like tribute to a nation's fairness in all the records of history than in the fulfillment of the pledge of free conference.

"The international conference on the limitation of armaments was called, not in haste, not because someone was prodding, but as early as the barriers to success could be removed, and the spirit of that conference and the achievements thereof have been written into history and will immeasurably be on the almost universal popular favor already accorded. It was not alone the triumph of reducing naval armaments, and ending competition which was leading to oppressive naval strength, and adding staggering burdens to the treasuries of competing powers; not alone the removal of every war cloud and every reason for conflict in the Pacific so that now accord and concord abide where suspicion and fear have previously dwelt, but to give an example to the world of the conference way to peace, which time will appraise as the supreme accomplishment.

"Hardly had that gratifying work been accomplished before the administration began its endeavors for further fulfillment. Meanwhile an international court of justice had been established. It was an agency of peaceful settlement which had long been sought. Its establishment previously had failed because no agreement had been possible over the method of electing judges. The existence of the League of Nations offered a solution. Almost all the members of the League had signed the protocol establishing the court. The members of the Council in which the larger powers have permanent representation, afforded one voting body with the veto on the members of the Assembly, consisting of representatives of all nations, and members of the Assembly could have a veto on the larger powers permanently represented in the Council.

"Here was a device for electing judges which removed the heretofore unsolvable problem of a satisfactory means of selecting them.

"Not the Council, but the nations members thereof, must vote in majority for the same candidates for which members of the Assembly vote in majority else the election is void until a conference points the way to an agreement.

"The court was established and is functioning. An American judge sits on the court, though we had no part in choosing him, and under the provisions of its establishment the United States can apply for a court decision on any justiciable questions, even as any nation participating in the court's establishment.

"Perhaps the court is not all that some advocates of the court plan would have it be, but it is in a large measure the fulfillment of an aspiration we long have boasted for the United States of America; so I thought and I still think we ought to be a party to the agreement and assume our part in its maintenance and give to it the benefit of such influence as our size and wealth and ideals may prove to be of use to it. (Applause.)

"For mere eligibility to appeal to the court, nothing was needed. But it does not seem fair to seek its advantages without accepting all becoming responsibilities, and here developed the stumbling block.

"Naturally we should wish to participate in selecting the judges, and the electors designated were members of the League. We had no thought of joining the League, we sought none of its offerings we would accept none of its obligations. The President could propose no solution to the signatory powers because the world had witnessed in disappointment the spectacle of an executive proposing and the Senate disposing, and it was not

THIS is the new $2,000,000 office building being erected in Des Moines by the Equitable Life Insurance of Iowa. This building, when completed, will be by far the largest and most magnificent office building in the entire state. It is an example of the growth which Des Moines is now experiencing. The Des Moines Capital is Iowa's biggest evening newspaper.

In January, February and March the Capital published a larger volume of local advertising and a larger volume of department store advertising than any other Des Moines newspaper.

Here are the department store figures:

January — February — March — 1923

CAPITAL (Evening Only)	502,437 lines
2nd Newspaper (Evening Only)	420,468 lines
3rd Newspaper (Evening Only)	128,885 lines
4th Newspaper (Morning and Sunday)	86,967 lines

Here also are the local advertising figures (for the same period):

CAPITAL (Evening Only)	1,362,991 lines
2nd Newspaper (Evening Only)	1,347,734 lines
3rd Newspaper (Morning and Sunday)	618,758 lines
4th Newspaper (Evening Only)	386,388 lines

IMPORTANT NOTE:

The Capital competes with a publisher who advertises a morning and evening newspaper combination as a single newspaper with a single circulation. This confuses many national advertisers. The local advertiser knows the situation.

desirable to make some proposal abroad that could not be carried out.

"Indeed, none would be considered, and it was not pleasing to think of asking the Senate's consent to a program to which the nations concerned would not agree.

"So very informally and very discreetly, and over a considerable period of time, the situation was felt out, and when satisfied that there was an appropriate course of action without connection with the League, provided the Senate consented, I proposed adherence to the court protocol and asked the Senate's consent.

"The documents speak for themselves. It was pointed out that no rights under the League and no obligations of the League would be incurred, but to make certain that we would not be involved, the letter of the Secretary of State suggested suitable reservations to afford ample guaranty.

"There is the complete recital. It is in harmony with platform pledges, with candidatorial promises, I believe in harmony with American aspirations. The Senate's decision was hardly to be expected amid the enormous pressure of business incident to the closing weeks of the short session. But I felt that the Senate, the country, and the friendly nations whose counsel we have sought, were entitled to know that our gestures abroad were sincere, and that our own people should know that there are no secrets about our purposes at home, once they are matured.

"Excessive friends of the League have beclouded the situation but their unwarranted assumption that it is a move toward League membership. Let them disabuse their minds, because there is no such thought among us who must make our commitments abroad.

"And the situation is likewise beclouded by those who shudder excessively when the League is mentioned, and who assume entanglement is unavoidable. Any entanglement would first require an assent of the Senate, and if by any chance the Senate approved of any entanglements, the present administration would not complete the ratification. (Applause.)

"If, in spite of these statements, uttered with full deliberation, there are excessive and unfounded objections on one hand, or utterly unjustifiable apprehensions on the other, I know of no words fittingly to apply.

"Frankly, there is one political bugbear. When we discussed the League of Nations and its rule of force with its super-powers through a political Council and Assembly, I myself contended as a Senator for equal voting power on the part of the United States with any nation in the world. With her dominions, members of the League Assembly, the British Empire will have six votes in that branch of the court electorate, but it has only one in the electorate of the Council. In view of the fact that no nation can have more than one judge, it is a less formidable objection than when applied to the League as a super-power dealing with problems likely to abridge a nation's rights.

"I appraise the objection now as one who voted against its disparity of power in the League Assembly, but in the appraisal now I do not hesitate to say that if other great powers can accept without fear the voting strength of the British dominions, when these great powers are without the ties of race to minimize international rivalries and suspicions, we ought, in view of the natural ties of English-speaking kinship, feel ourselves reasonably free from danger.

"The international court must be a matter of development. I earnestly commend it because I think it is a step in the right direction toward peaceful settlement of judiciable questions, toward the elimination of frictions which lead to war.

"We can do vastly more to perfect it in the capacity of an adherence than in aloofness in which we relegate to selves a right to say to the world dictate but never comply.'

"I yield none of our rights, nor our nationality, but I gladly yield o institutions and our co-operation to forward and forward toward that peace and that reign of justice whi infinitely more secure in the rule o tional honor than in national or national force (applause).

"I have indulged the dream, I hav dulged the justified hope that out o international court might come the fillment of our larger aspirations the proof of its utility and a spir concord among nations might come voluntary conference of nations ou which could be expected a clarified codified international law to fu assured peace under the law, and nations that understanding whic ever the first and the best guarant peace.

"I would not have a thought t hold this question paramount to all o confronting our government.

"I do not hold it a menace to the of any political party. It is not t classed as a party question, but if party repeatedly advocating a w court, is to be rendered by the sugge of an effort to perform in accor with its pledge, it needs a new appr of its assets.

"Our problems at home invariably for first consideration. Our own h must be kept in order and our own fortune must be assured before we be large contributors to world pro or measurably helpful to humanity, I have little patience with the conte of those who believe that larger mercial advantages will attain our l assumption of world responsibilities.

"Nations are not engaged in bart their trade advantages for larger fel ships. We do not do it ourselves an need not ask what we do not give. (merce is the very life blood of every ple's existence and a nation's comme opportunities are valued little less the security of its citizenship.

"A restored Europe with less cons tion in conflict and more production consumption in hopeful peace and ished hate would add to the volum world commerce, and we would gl acclaim such a restoration and our fluence and our helpfulness are r whenever they will avail. But we not intrude where we ourselves w resist an intrusion.

"Our peaceful commerce is gainin strength because we are free from p ical entanglements and can be cha with no selfish designs. In the ma of new pacts and the remaking of which is ever going on, we ask no and we expect no less than that e part which we are ever ready to gra others. That position is absolutely assailable. The nation which g justice may confidently ask it, and world socially, politically and com cially which would promote ju through association or judgment o Court, must practice justice in its transactions. In reciting the pro of the fulfillment in our foreign tions I have omitted to make refer to one, and that is to enlarged and f understanding with all the republic the Western Continent.

OMAHA BEE HAS BIG EXPANSION PROGRAM

Changes in Personnel Also Announced —Brewer Increases Holdings— Fred S. Hunter Acting as Managing Editor

A number of changes in personnel have been made by the Omaha (Neb.) Bee in connection with a program of expansion.

BASIL BREWER

Basil Brewer, general manager, has largely increased his holdings of stock and become vice-president of the Bee Publishing Company. Mr. Brewer has been general manager and part owner since December, 1921.

The Bee is now published by the Bee Publishing Company, which was incorporated in January, 1923. Officers are N. B. Updike, president; Basil Brewer, vice-president; Gorton Roth, secretary, and Frank J. DeTemple, treasurer. In connection with the sale of stock to Mr. Brewer, N. B. Updike said: "My year and a half of association with Mr. Brewer in publishing the Bee has made me glad to have him increase his holdings in the Omaha Bee."

Fred S. Hunter, for three years city editor, is now acting managing editor. John B. Long, formerly assistant city editor of the Des Moines (Iowa) Tribune, has been made city editor. Paul Greer is in charge of the editorial pages.

V. A. Bridge has succeeded Elmer S. Rood as circulation manager. Mr. Bridge was formerly assistant circulation manager. Before joining the Omaha Bee he was in charge of the country circulation of the Cincinnati Post.

In the advertising department, James A. Austin, formerly promotion manager of the World-Herald, is establishing an extensive service department for the Bee. Rome Benedict, formerly of the Norfolk (Neb.) News, is now copy chief of the service department under Mr. Austin.

Beginning March 14, the Bee started publication of all features syndicated by the New York Tribune and added the International News Service and the Universal News Service and Arthur Brisbane's "Today" feature.

ment over the Senate's failure to give approval.

"For security of defense, for the avoidance of such extravagant and ineffectual outlay in the case of future wars as we experienced in the last and for the promotion of our commerce and our eminence on the seas, I believe still a great merchant marine is an outstanding American requirement. (Applause.) And since we cannot hope for government aid to private ownership, we propose to do our best to organize and consolidate our lines and services, applying the lessons of experience which costs us hundreds of millions in operation alone, and then offer them for sale. If we cannot sell, we are going to operate and operate aggressively until Congress inhibits such a course.

"Confessedly, this is a contradiction of the proposal to have less government in business and more business in government; but if we cannot get out of the shipping business in a practical way and be assured of privately-owned and privately-operated shipping, it is the business of government to conserve our shipping assets and make for ourself reliance on the high seas.

ANY LINE IN THE PAPER

Set from the Same Linotype

It has been hard to get some newspaper publishers to realize that the Linotypes are now so flexible that they can set any line in the paper. The thing seems too good to be true.

And so for the A. N. P. A. Convention this year we have prepared an exhibit that will present the range and adaptability of the Text-and-Display Linotype in a very forceful and unforgettable way.

First a specimen page was set combining all the problems of the front page and advertising page display. Then part of this page was photographically enlarged twelve times its natural size so that it would take up a whole corner of the room. In the middle of the page a hole was cut out big enough to admit a Model 21 Linotype and a magazine rack. Ribbons run in from various type faces on the page to the magazines showing how the entire page was set from the one machine—all from one keyboard, and each font completely contained in one magazine.

The Exhibit shown on the preceding page was made BIG because it has a big significance for every newspaper:

Any Newspaper, Large or Small, Can Enjoy the Speed and Economy of Linotype-Set Display

Display Linotypes are saving money in hundreds of composing rooms—in small dailies and weeklies as well as big city papers.

Many small papers have proved that it would pay to put in a Display Linotype even if it were only used three or four hours a day to set display because in those three or four hours the display machine does work that would take many hours if done by hand.

But there is no need for a Text-and-Display Linotype ever being idle. In the average small or medium sized office it will clean up the display composition in a short time and then be ready to help out on any kind of composition for which it is needed.

In addition to being a Display Machine it can be a Utility Machine, of wide usefulness, ready at any time for any task.

Ask the nearest agency to show you just how a Text-and-Display Linotype will fit into your composing room and speed up production all along the line.

LOCAL CIRCULATION AT SATURATION POINT

ased on at least three points—a quality ewspaper, reasonable price and service. 'he majority of newspapers have eached the saturation point in city cir- ulation, so now their only recourse ›ward making any striking increases in irculation is in the country to and on ıe rural route. You must furnish your ural patrons with a paper which appeals › them. Therefore, we should study ıe needs of our farmer friends."

W. P. Lovell, of the Bloomington (Ill.) 'antagraph, spoke on "What Do R. F.). Subscribers Value Most in a Daily 'aper—the News, Pictures or Markets; 'ew York stocks, bonds or produce?" Ie said in part:

"Obviously, the primary function of a aily newspaper is to give the news of he day and certain legitimate advertis- ıg to its readers. Just what is news is ometimes debatable but, without ques- ion, the general news of the day, ictures and all market reports, whether hey be of stocks, bonds or farm produce re all news as distinguished from dvertising. I presume that the member uggesting this subject has in mind, when ıe speaks of "Pictures," the news pic- ure page so popular at the present time, ather than cartoons and comic strips, nd as "news" he doubtless means to lassify the written local and telegraphic ews, country correspondence, etc.

"Doubtless, the average farmer is nost interested in the market reports, articularly during the seasons when he ıas stocked grain or other produce to ell. His wife is also a follower of the narkets. While the New York financial uotations of stocks and bonds are of nterest to some R. F. D. subscribers, hey are, I am sure, but comparatively ew who are investors. At the same ime, they are doubtless followed in a asual way by many as an index to the eneral prosperity of the country, all of vhich has an influence on their own radings in live stock and grain. I hould say produce markets are in the lass of news most valued by the R. F.). subscriber."

Walter E. Hoots, assistant circulation nanager of the Indianapolis Star, de- lared that in his opinion the best way or a morning newspaper to develop nore home delivery business both in a ity of publication and suburban territory s to give, first, unexcelled delivery ervice to the subscribers already on the ists, and, secondly, secure new readers y intelligent promotion methods.

"The circulation of a morning news- aper is founded upon prompt, early elivery service," he said. "No morn- ng paper regardless of its merits can ope to achieve a full measure of success n its field unless it has a well oiled, fficient delivery service."

Speaking on attracting the attention f non-readers, W. J. Parker, assistant irculation manager of the Chicago Evening American, named four elements:

"First, attract attention," he said. Second, arouse interest. Third, create lesire. Fourth, move to action. A plan f campaign may carry the first three lements successfully and fail on the ourth. In that case the plan, irrespec- ive of the amount of money spent, the mount of energy expanded, proves a dismal failure.

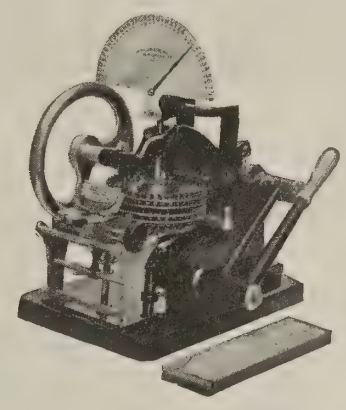
"The biggest problem the newspaper as is figuring out a plan that will be roductive in attracting the attention of he non-reader only—eliminate the cost f attracting the attention of one who is already a reader. (In some cases this s not determined, as it cannot be in uch campaigns as direct by mail and sampling, which is very expensive as, n many cases, your promotion matter s going to someone who has been a eader for many years and the value is lost.) So in figuring a real campaign hese are two methods that should be eliminated, unless in the case of sampling you stand a man near the news stand at some prominent place and give him the same number of copies of your paper that this news stand sells of all the other papers combined. Then when a cus- tomer approaches the stand, and buys a paper other than yours, this man hands him a copy—this is the only method of sampling that I know of, where you eliminate the chance of duplication."

"First of all each circulation manager must decide about the amount of terri- tory he wishes his paper to obtain cir- culation in, and then, after this has been accomplished, watch the renewals," de- clared Walter Wilcox, of the Elgin (Ill.) Daily Courier. "Our field covers a territory including in a radius of about 25 miles, as we find that our advertisers are interested in this circulation. In this territory we have one man who solicits the farmers for new business and renewals. While he is calling upon these people he explains the merits of our paper and the advantages it is for them to read it. In doing this we find that he not only educates our readers but creates a friendship with our sub- scribers."

J. P. Kienzle, circulation manager of the Springfield, Illinois, State Journal, said distributing of a "self erasing pad" represented the best suburban circulation building stunt he ever used. "I want to keep the self-erasing pad you sent me. Please increase my State Journal order one copy daily and Sunday, or two copies Sunday only. I agree to hold increase for at least eight weeks," read the coupon sent with each pad to a newsboy. He said over 75 per cent of the carriers responded with increase.

Ray Evans, of the Davenport (Ia.) Times, told how to build good will and develop enthusiasm in a carrier organiza- tion. "The first step I take when hiring a new boy is to have a real talk with him explaining each phase of and every- thing about the work, making him feel at home and by doing this I try to gain his confidence," he said in part. "I give him the impression that he is one of the cogs in the big machinery, thus giv- ing him a feeling of responsibility. I give the boys the glad hand, advise and praise them."

"I do not want to come right out and disapprove of giving automobiles in subscription campaigns but I do think that eight out of every ten of these campaigns conducted the publishers found it far more expensive than it was first estimated," declared James J. McMillon, of the Danville (Ill.) Morn- ing Press. "For a new paper it is a good thing. But for the established paper it is mighty expensive and the money could be spent better in the editorial room toward giving the people a better paper more successfully."



"Head Lines" was the subject of the address of J. A. Beckett, outside circu- lation manager of the Decatur (Ill.) Review. "Head lines are, if truthful, a great benefit to a newspaper," he said, "but very often they are misleading. When the reader picks up a newspaper, whether it be on the street car or in the home, the first thing he looks for is the streamer. The streamer is supposed to state with emphasis the leading news article in that day's issue. Of course, on this point editors will differ. Thus we see different streamers on different paper publications of the same date.

"Yet this may be accounted for, par- tially at least, by the fact that an article of national importance may be of more importance to the readers of the New York Times than of the Denver Post. "Headlines are often written by persons who do not understand the conditions surrounding the making of the story. Once I wrote a human interest story about a girl suffering from the sleeping sickness, a daughter of an acquaintance of mine who was a very good citizen in the town in which we lived, and mailed it to our paper. It was with pride that I thought of the morrow when I knew those dear anxious parents would search every column, every line, if necessary to find out what their favorite

This machine is used for embossing names on our patented thin aluminum plates; the machine is about the same size as a typewriter, absolutely noiseless and has a capacity of 50 plates per hour. It is operated by hand lever; not motor driven. (See motor driven machine below.)

Do away with your galley room and linotype slugs for newsdealers and subscribers. Substitute our thin indestructible aluminum plates, have the printing of your mailer strip, preparation of the lists, etc., done in the circulation department under the observation of the circulation manager, where the work can be done in half the time required with any other system and names entered on a daily list up to within an hour before closing time.

For those whose lists warrant it, we have an Automatic Mailing Machine which eliminates mailer strip entirely and prints on the margin of the publication direct at a speed of from 10,000 to 15,000 per hour.

The next meeting of the association will be held in Chicago in October.

CIRCULATION NEWS AND VIEWS

R. B. MAHAFFEY, circulation manager of the Waycross (Ga.) Journal-Herald, has left that paper to go with the Wilmington (N. C.) Dispatch. George Hoffer succeeds him on the Journal-Herald.

The Omaha Daily News has 500 Ranger bicycles to give away to boys and girls for pulling in subscriptions.

About 600 boys and girls of Scottsbluff, Neb., have been entertained by the Platte Valley Daily News for the last two Saturday afternoons at a movie party.

Subscription contest for carriers has been inaugurated by the Xenia (Ohio) Evening Gazette. In addition to cash prizes, the Gazette has also posted a grand prize of an all-day picnic at Lakeside Park, Dayton, for carriers who secure more than two new subscriptions which are retained more than six weeks each.

Carriers of the Xenia (Ohio) Evening Gazette have organized a baseball team and sent challenges to carrier teams in other cities in central and southwestern Ohio.

The Columbus (Ohio) Evening Dispatch is offering prizes of baseball equipment for new subscriptions. The contest is open to any boy in the city.

Louis A. Pfeifer, better known as "Augie," celebrated his sixty-fourth birthday on April 22 and also the anniversary of his fifty-fourth year of service with the Columbus, Ohio, State Journal. Mr. Pfeifer entered the newspaper's service in 1869, as a newsboy. He next entered the circulation department, which he has served ever since. Mr. Pfeifer is the veteran of the State Journal family. He has moved with the Journal four times as the paper grew larger.

More than 125 boys competed in the marbles tournament staged by the Ogden (Utah) Standard-Examiner. Cash prizes of $7.50, $5 and $2.50 were awarded the three winners. The contests were conducted by Al Warden, sports editor.

Ira Rebman, formerly circulation manager for the Eugene (Ore.) Register, has resigned to become an automobile salesman.

The St. Paul Daily News will award a large American flag to the school winning first place in a spelling contest for high schools of the city and county. The News has also started a circulation campaign with prizes for carriers quite out of the ordinary. The fifteen most successful carrier-canvassers will be given a two-week outing in a summer camp on the St. Croix River in Wisconsin, with all expenses paid. In addition, the five best carriers will be allowed $5 each for spending money and the wages of their substitutes will be paid. The next five best will also receive $5, but must pay their substitutes. The last group of five will have only their expenses paid.

BETTING INFORMATION BANNED IN ONTARIO

Province Takes Strong Stand on Publications of Odds or Any Money Facts in Connection with Horse Racing

In the event of the Canadian Parliament failing to pass legislation prohibiting the publishing of betting information in Canada, the province of Ontario will have ready for proclamation, an act which will make it an offense to publish such information within the province limits. The measure has passed the committees and is ready for the third reading in the legislature. If the Dominion law materializes the Ontario bill will remain inoperative.

According to the terms of the Ontario act, betting information includes: "Tips, selections, choices, odds, winning money prices, money paid to winners, pari-mutuel payments or any similar information relating to or applicable to, or connected with any horse race, steeplechase, pacing, running or trotting race, whether held within or without Ontario." The committee added to this list names of owners' stables or jockeys.

The word publication is defined as including: "Board, tape, sheet, paper, pamphlet, newspaper, magazine or periodical," and publish includes, "the act of writing, typewriting, printing and otherwise making information legible and the act of producing, displaying, distributing, selling or offering for sale and disposing of." The penalty attached is $500 fine in addition to which an offender may be sent to jail for six months.

The province has no power to stop outside newspapers containing betting information from entering the province by mail, but it does claim the power to prevent their sale, unless offending portions are cut out or obliterated. An amendment provides that the law shall not apply to British newspapers.

In reply to a question as to the position of a man receiving through the mail paper containing betting information and showing it to another, the Attorney General said that would be an offense.

NEWS GOLF TOURNAMENT

Editor & Publisher Cup Play Will Be in Washington May 22

Golf play on the second leg of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER cup, the intercity trophy of the newspaper golf clubs, will be renewed by teams representing Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington and possibly Baltimore some time early in September. Definite decision to invite the teams to Washington for the second intercity match has been reached by the Washington Newspaper Golf Club and correspondence now is underway looking to the arrangement of the tournament.

The ten-man team representing the New York Club won the first tournament and a leg on the EDITOR & PUBLISHER cup over the Engineers Course a year ago last summer, when only Boston and Washington took part. The Philadelphia organization has expressed a desire to take part in the second tournament and Baltimore will be invited if a local organization of newspaper golfers is perfected there.

The annual spring tournament of the Washington newspaper men, in which President Harding will participate, will take place May 22 on the new Rock Creek Park course. The links, an addition to Washington's system of municipal courses, will be opened by the newspaper tournament.

Kansas to Raise—Golf Scores

Kansas newspaper men afflicted with "golfitis" will be guests of Topeka May 28 and 29 at the fifth semi-annual golf tournament of the Kansas Golf Association. The Topeka Press Club will entertain the visitors. A cup has been offered by Frank P. MacLennan.

OUR OWN WORLD OF LETTERS

Edited by JAMES MELVIN LEE

Director Department of Journalism, New York University

ACADEMIC and pedantic critics of the press who continually "point with pride" to British journals and "view with alarm" certain characteristics of the American press, are too often unfamiliar with the foreign press which they praise so highly. In the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post, Frank Ward O'Malley makes a startling comparison of New York and London newspapers, in his article "Slowing Down Through Fleet Street." By way of comparison he takes the tragic deaths of Field Marshal Sir Henry Wilson and Stanford White.

White was killed at five minutes to eleven—one hour and five minutes before New York newspapers went to press. Field Marshal Wilson was shot immediately after luncheon hour. How well the White story in spite of time limits was covered by New York newspapers needs no comment. How the murder of Wilson was handled by the London papers is thus summed up by Mr. O'Malley:

"Not a single Fleet Street newspaper appearing the evening of the day Sir Henry was killed, nor the papers of the next morning nor even the next night, had the correct names of his murders. These earlier stories passed over the cause of the crime with one, sometimes two lines of vaguest surmise. There was absolutely nothing told about the movements of the murderers in the hours preceding the shooting, nothing at all about their previous lives or records.

"One London 'night final'—now before me as I write—places the crime in the wrong street. The names of the policemen shot during the chase and capture of the murderers are not mentioned in these first stories.

"One leading London paper failed to note altogether that a brave citizen who aided in the chase also was shot by the murderers. A part of the London press had three murderers arrive in a taxicab and shoot Sir Henry. There were only two, and they did not drive up in a taxicab. One final edition before me was able to muster up eighty-four lines in all describing the crime, other papers had nearer one hundred lines; and even this length of story was obtained in all the evening papers only by resorting to the typographical tricks of using large type, wide spacings between the lines and by making a separate paragraph of absolutely every sentence."

The article is full of other comparisons that make one proud of the American newspaper. Edwin C. Hill, who wrote the White story for the New York Sun, is called by Mr. O'Malley "the best reporter America has produced." No one has keener appreciation of Mr. Hill than myself. But the excellent work done by Mr. O'Malley, himself, challenges his own statement. To be on sure ground, it might be well to follow the custom of the columnist and use the phrase, "the second best," and leave the matter of first place open to debate.

To borrow thunder again from the columnist, I should like to hear from the readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER as to whom they consider the greatest American reporter. Please vote early—but only once for your favorite.

THE Challenge Machinery Company of Grand Haven, Mich., published a practical house organ entitled "The Printers' Album." It is a "fat take" for progressive printers who run a job department in connection with their newspapers. The current issue opens with "Timely Sales Ideas" by Bert Dallas. BETWEEN editions, or while waiting for an assignment, a good book to have handy is "The Globe Trotter" by H. I. Phillips (Doubleday, Page & Co.). Its author, a great favorite of column fans, conducts a column of the same title as that of the volume, in the New York Globe. For newspaper workers, I recommend:

The Society Editor Reports a Horse Race.
Bok Review of the New Telephone Directory.
An evening with the Radio.
The Ex-Kaiser's Memoirs. (With apologies to The New York Times).
The Bobbed Haired Girls Strike Back at the Bosses.
Summer Resort News.

The volume is dedicated to George T. Hughes, who as city editor, first, of the Evening Mail and later of the New York Globe showed remarkable ability in discovering talent among [illegible] his staff.

THE blue ribbon certainly belongs to the Cleveland Plain Dealer for its excellent booklet, "Cleveland's Three-Million Market and How to Sell It."

It is a very comprehensible collection of merchandising data regarding the trading radius with Cleveland as the center, and shows in a graphic way the sales possibilities of that territory. Metropolitan papers have issued at various times advertising booklets to promote the use of their columns as a marketing medium but no newspaper has published a better survey than that to which attention is called in this paragraph. What makes the booklet distinctive is the addition of numerous maps in which the distances from various points are computed in minutes rather than in miles—the right yard stick to use in advertising literature of this sort. Any advertising manager who is thinking of putting out a booklet to set forth the merits of his publication ought to get a copy of "Cleveland's Three-Million Market."

THE close relations between politics and the press, so far as Europe is concerned, is clearly indicated in "Whither France? Whither Europe?" by Joseph Caillaux, Former Premier of France, (Alfred A. Knopf). The former premier does not hesitate to say that one French paper, at least, received subsidies from two foreign sources, and gives the impression that the editorial page in France is for sale the same as the advertising columns.

His own views, whether one agrees with them or not, will be welcomed by the discriminating reader. The views of Caillaux about the French press are expressed as follows:

"No well informed politician can have failed to notice the transformation which has taken place in journalism in the last thirty years. The journals of opinion which used to assemble their readers strictly on party lines, which used to balance and counteract one another as it were, have been superseded by great news organs. What has happened in industry has also happened with the press. Massive citadels have been erected which overshadow and threaten to crush the smaller fortresses. An enterprise so vast as a newspaper, requiring millions, was bound to depend for support upon the moneyed classes. The latter at first managed to influence the two Houses of Parliament and then to gain an ascendancy over them, thanks to a press, which at the word of command defamed and calumniated parties and their leaders, discredited parliamentarians and their bills, and ridiculed the government and its projects of reform."

OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD, in his series of articles in The Nation on American journalism, has reached the Pacific Coast. In the issue for April 25, Mr. Villard prints a personality sketch of Fremont Older, formerly of the San Francisco Bulletin and now of the San Francisco Call and Post. Mr. Villard sees Mr. Older as a "Pacific Coast Crusader" and in his own words "turns with joy to such a character." Mention is made in the article of Older's autobiography, "My Own Story," which attracted so much attention when it first appeared several years ago.

IS there a Negro press? What is it like? What is in it and how far does it really represent the race? What is its contribution to the problem of racial aspiration and struggle? What lies back of the Negro press question? What is its history? These are some of the questions which are answered in "The Negro Press in the United States" by Frederick G. Detweiler of Denison University (University of Chicago Press).

The editor seeking the sidelights on racial problems will find this volume illuminating. After a statistical resume and a historical review of the Negro press in slavery days, it devotes considerable space to the favorite themes of the Negro press and the contents of Negro newspapers. The chapters most helpful to editorial writers are those dealing with the solutions of the race problem and the Negro criticism of Negro li[illegible]

The author's purpose has been to let the Negro press speak for itself. For this reason, the book is a valuable contribution to the literature dealing with the race relations.

THE cub reporter and the headline writer who want to increase their vocabulary, will find "The Century Vocabulary Builder" by Garland Greever and Joseph M. Bachelor (the Century Company) an excellent desk manual. No extravagant claims are made for this volume. The authors clearly point out that the more distant the reader stands from verbal bankruptcy, the less likely he is to indulge in needless display. Special stress is put upon the need of a study of words in action. The plan of the book as the chapter headings will indicate is to show words in combination. It is an excellent volume to supplement "[illegible] the Way It's Written" by Henry Justin Smith, news editor of the Chicago Daily News.

DOUGLASS WOOD MILLER of Ohio Wesleyan University has produced a text book "that's different" in "Practical Exercises in News Writing and Editing" (D. C. Heath & Co.). The exercises in proof reading are admirably selected. While the book has little practical value for the experienced newspaper man it will serve a useful purpose as a text in the various universities offering technical instruction in journalism.

CHARLES DICKENS, when asked by his publishers to draw up a list of titles for the weekly he was about to edit, suggested "The Forge" with the recommendation that the following quotation from Longfellow be placed underneath:

Thus at the glowing FORGE of life our actions must be wrought;
Thus on its sounding anvil shaped
Each burning deed and thought.

The title finally selected for this weekly was, of course, "Household Words." Another title suggested by Dickens was "Time and Tide." It is interesting to note that a recent American weekly in the periodical field is called "Time."

NEW JOURNALISTS' CLUB OFFERS SCHOLARSHIPS

Atlantic City Organization Founds Fund for Columbia School Courses —Members Not Required to Pay Dues

Founded several months ago by Charles S. Scheuer, Atlantic City newspaper and magazine editor, the Journalists' Club of Atlantic County justly rivals many older and more widely known American newspaper clubs in some respects. Mr. Scheuer has endowed the club with a $50,000 fund, from which two scholarships in the School of Journalism at Columbia University will be presented annually to the boy and girl showing the most remarkable aptitude in the study of journalism.

The club was incorporated under the laws of New Jersey. Members do not have to pay dues.

Discussing the aims of the organization Mr. Scheuer, who is publisher of the Ventnor N. J. News, Atlantic City Mirror and other magazines, said:

"We feel that it is the duty of such members of a community as are earnestly concerned with the intellectual progress of the American people as a new and fresh force in the world of letters, to begin concerted action toward directing general attention to meritorious work, and to imbue the greatest possible number with an understanding and appreciation of what is perhaps the finest of the Seven Arts, first, by instructing ourselves more thoroughly; secondly, by teaching and directing those whose feet are to follow in the path we tread, and thirdly, by helping those who buy and read what is written to that discrimination which when practiced by great numbers, determine the degree of intellectual importance to which a nation or a race subscribes.

"If, in doing this, we are able to accomplish in some manner, however imperfect, the work of setting before the civic eyes of countless municipalities and communities in this country an idea, which though bare and meagre at its inception, may expand in time into something like a dawn of greater intellectual and spiritual grace in a people whose understanding of the need for the deeper, more significant and more lasting elements that make a national life of benefit to posterity is, as yet, retarded by the exuberance of youth and adventure, we shall have achieved much more, and in greater proportion, than we dare now to hope."

Thirty resident members, including newspaper men and women of every daily, weekly and magazine in Atlantic County are on the rolls of the club. They are:

David Adams, Will Casseboom, Jr., James Cottrell, Miss Ruth Osborne Ewan, Henry Gries, Arthur S. Grossman, Francis J. Harnett, Miss Leila M. Holt, William P. Houpt, Mort-Latz Lippman, Mrs. Elene D. Loeb, Seth Maxwell, Miss Grace Mary Moore, Mrs. Ida Baker Moore, Nathaniel R. Packard, Miss Virginia Morse Packard, Adrian W. Phillips, Roland B. Rathbone, Charles S. Scheuer, Lionel Scheuer, Mrs. Millie M. Scheuer, M. Wallace Sharpe, Ira T. B. Smith, Vincent Speciale, Miss Gladys Stoudt, Miss Ada Taylor, Herbert C. Test, Carl M. Voelker, Arthur G. Walker and Walter W. Whitman.

Among the non-resident members of the club are several authors and short-story writers, newspaper editors, actors and actresses. The non-resident members include:

Julius H. Barnes, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, was the guest at one of the series of spring entertainments staged by the National Press Club. Mr. Barnes addressed the club on his impressions of economic and social conditions in Europe and the Near East gleaned from his recent trip abroad in connection with the meeting of the International Chamber of Commerce at Rome. After his talk Mr. Barnes submitted to questions from the correspondents throwing illuminating, but confidential side-lights on the situation in Europe. A special showing of "The Covered Wagon," a filming of Emerson Hough's story of pioneer life, furnished the attraction for the club's first "Ladies Night" of the season last Sunday.

Postmaster General New Orders All Postmasters to Consult with Publishers on Ways to Eliminate Transportation Delays

WASHINGTON, April 24.—Postmasters throughout the country were asked today by the Post Office Department to consult with newspaper publishers on ways and means to insure prompt delivery of newspapers sent through the mails. A circular sent out from the office of Postmaster General New said:

"You are aware that much circular and miscellaneous matter is commited to the mails, wrapped somewhat similar to newspapers, while not requiring the same expedition in transmission, and that newspapers are delayed on account of being involved in a mass of such kind of less important mail.

"It has been suggested by some as a remedy that newspapers be wrapped in some standardized form or color so as to render them readily recognizable, and that the department should then direct some priority of speed and care in handling. Indeed, this in a way, has been attempted in places, but I fear that it has not organized with any uniformity or sistency of plan.

A Fire in a Newspaper Office

Last fall we partially equipped the presses of a large newspaper plant in a nearby City with our Duplex Rollers. Two months later there was a fire in their pressroom, and the Rollers were returned for recovering. The illustration above shows the advantage of the Duplex Rollers over the regular composition Roller. While the surface of the Duplex Roller was scorched from the flames and the journals slightly rusted from water, the Roller could have been used. The regular composition Roller was melted out of shape and the surface blistered from the water.

The firm asked us to cast all of their Rollers with Duplex Composition.

The Duplex is a twofold Roller. It increases production as the friction caused by the high speed of the press does not heat it and cause it to melt. It is not affected by climatic conditions. It is no longer necessary for the superintendent to stand in the pressroom with a grouch in one hand and a thermometer in the other watching an idle press from which melted Rollers are being removed.

Duplex Rollers will not melt on the hottest summer day, at the highest speed of the press.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

And They Called It Journalism

DETROIT, Mich.,
April 21, 1923.

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Is it too much to hope for that your well-applied editorial lashing of March 31st, "And They Called It Journalism," will be supported by some reaffirmation of the gentlemanhood of the guild at the forthcoming convention of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association?

I have been traveling about the country almost continually since my return from Europe last fall, appearing before commercial and civic bodies from coast to coast; and I want to say to you, and through you to the brethern whom you are brave enough to rebuke when overtaken by grievous offending, that it is simply appalling to a newspaper man who loves his profession with the accumulated ferver of forty years' devotion, to learn how generally, bitterly, thoughtful citizens of standing share the castigatory reproaches which you have applied so scorchingly in connection with the most recent instance of journalistic ruthlessness.

The impression prevails that it is not exceptional or accidental, but a fixed and growing practice for our daily prints to crucify blameless women and children in order to extend a salacious sex sensation into a serial. The sins of the father are visited upon the entire family—not incidentally, but with sordid directness—for the sake of circulation. "Get letters; get pictures; tell how the wife takes it; pump the children and servants"—here you have the authorization of reportorial infamy. Such cruelty, such cowardice, taken in connection with the playing up of crime and scandal, are responsible for a very palpable lowering of popular esteem for the American press.

Prideful citizens who would prefer to include our newspapers in their exaltation of everything American, find themselves wondering to what extent the vitiating of our home life is exacerbated by newspaper grossness and sensuality.

Under the circumstances, is it any wonder that one must journey for to find unqualified confidence in the American press, or the conviction that it is a definite power for good?

It may be said that such hounding of the unoffending as you reprobated in your editorial of March 31st, in conection with the chambering of a Philadelphia millionaire, is not typical. Once it was not. Now, so feverish the rivalry to be in readiness for the coming of the A. B. C. auditor, it is all too common.

A parallel outrage in Detroit was a morning paper's publication of a large cut of the mansion of a prominent business man who is being sued for divorce, accompanied by the announcement of a story in the next Sunday edition explaining "Why Love Went Out When Wealth Came In." As a result of exposing an entire household to the pain of pitiless publicity, unavoidable in the case of the principals, of course, the wedding of a daughter in this home has been indefinitely postponed.

At the memorial services in honor of the late Bishop Williams, held last Sunday, I took occasion to treat this dastardly piece of business in something of the spirit of your editorial denunciation, as follows:

"'I fear no foe in shining armor,' the poet sang. But a newspaper of the largest circulation is another matter. It has been known to scare politicians, business men, even preachers, out of their boots. But Bishop Williams, unbeguiled by first page publicity, untempted by the sop of becoming a paid contributor, unawed by editorial vengeance, remained captain of his soul—not bound, but free. The super-newspaper had nothing on the unafraid prelate—not even a string.

"There came a day when the offense of the most powerful print in Detroit against decency was unusually flagrant, in connection with a divorce scandal that trailed its malodorous length through roadhouses and automobile joy-rides. Bishop Williams forbade the further delivery of the newspaper to his home, and publicly rebuked the publication for defiling the family life of the city.

"This brave Bishop did another astonishing thing. He announced his preference for another daily, not in a position to give his sermons and speeches as wide circulation as the excoriated sheet, and declared it to be the duty of all Christian citizens to stand by a newspaper pledged to cleanliness.

"Not long ago at a father and son's dinner a member of the Scovel Memorial church announced that he had discontinued his subscription to a Detroit daily because he deemed it unfit for his children to read. I always felt there were at least two churchmen in the city who reprobated filthy journalism, and here at last was the other one!

"Speaking to the public himself daily, almost hourly, Bishop Wiliams sensed the enormity of the offense of the publisher who has nothing better than smut and scandal to offer his readers in the most conspicious part of his journal. This undoubtedly struck Bishop Wiliams as equivalent to a man on the platform taking the time of his audience for the retailing of backdoor gossip. How long would a speaker with this conception of 'giving the people what they want,' be tolerated on any rostrum? Yet it is every whit as worthy of the 'auditorial we' as it is of the 'editorial we.'

"Can you imagine for a moment a r of Bishop Williams' highmindedness h ing up before his congregation at the r week meeting a picture of a Detroit h and announcing that at the Sunday ser following he would relate in detail ho happened that love went out of that h

NEW ORLEANS
First Market of the South

FINANCES—

In the New Orleans market finances enjoy a continued trend of stability. There are over 50 banks, including their branches, in New Orleans, and clearance figures for 1922 totaled $2,405,555,843. There's plenty of money in New Orleans and people are spending it.

INDUSTRY—

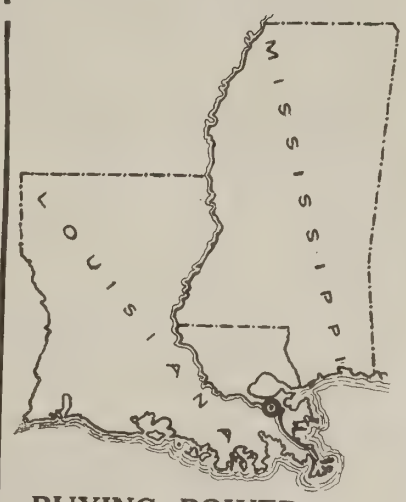
Resourcefulness of the New Orleans market is accentuated to a marked degree by its industrial possessions. The annual valuation of manufactured products from approximately 1,200 factories is well over $300,000,000. The industrial pay-roll annually is over $27,000,000.

Rich, Progressive and Receptive

IN New Orleans business is good and advertisers should not fail to include it in their market list when making up their advertising appropriations. It is a market well worth a try-out by any good product.

Because of its cosmopolitan population New Orleans has a diversified merchandise demand and an advertising appropriation wisely invested will net a substantial return.

Through The Times-Picayune you can secure a greater and more effective coverage than through any other New Orleans newspaper—Use The Times-Picayune and dominate the New Orleans market at one cost.



The Times-Picayune home delivered circulation is greater than all other New Orleans newspapers combined. The Times-Picayune has, also the largest city and total circulation both weekdays and Sundays of any other New Orleans newspaper.

During 1922, One Hundred and Seventy-Three National Advertisers confined their advertising appropriations in the New Orleans market to The Times Picayune exclusively.

BUYING POWER—

The estimated population of the New Orleans retail trading zone is 2,000,000—a buying power that promotes an annual distribution valued at $1,000,000,000. New Orleans is the recognized jobbing center for groceries, dry goods, drugs and hardware for five states and for Central and South America.

SECOND PORT—U. S. A.

The port of New Orleans ranks high among world markets. It is the gateway to the Mississippi Valley and enjoys a substantial year-round trade with South, Central America and Europe. During the next 18 months over $4,000,000 will be spent on port improvements. Value of exports in 1922 was $129.340.499, and exports totaled $353,457,924.

FLEET STREET CLUB ADD ENDORSEMENT OF "ON-TO-LONDON" IN 1924

London Times Drops Reader Insurance Scheme—British Publishers Watch Broadcasting Closely to Prevent Encroachment on Newspapers' Field

By HERBERT C. RIDOUT
(London Editor, EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON, April 19.—The Fleet Street Club is the original British institution of advertising men and it has grown out of a little social affair to becoming an organization that is more representative of the publishing side of advertising than any similar club. The Fleet Street Club asked to have the "On-to-London" movement explained to its members, and it was clear from the resulting meeting that the Thirty Club, as originators of the movement, is perfectly willing that every other advertising organization in Great Britain shall share in the glory of bringing into being the London Convention of 1924.

The executive committee of the Fleet Street Club had previously voiced a resolution by which it was "unanimously agreed that the club give the wholehearted support to the 1924 Advertising Convention," and in furtherance of this W. S. Crawford, and C. Harold Vernon, officers of the Thirty Club, were invited to give their views before a full meeting of the members.

President Charles Crane occupied the chair and introduced the speakers. W. S. Crawford emphasized the point that the members of the Fleet Street Club should appreciate the fact that the delegates they may send to Atlantic City with the other eighteen organizations supporting the convention would be entitled to and would secure in full measure their share of the limelight which must pour upon all as the result of their efforts. As the oldest advertising club in Great Britain he welcomed their association with the convention and hoped that they would shortly become affiliated with the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

C. Harold Vernon dealt specially with the benefits individual members of the party might expect to derive from their visit to Atlantic City in June, the low cost of the trip and the favorable travel and other arrangements the Thirty Club had been successful in making on behalf of the delegates. In addition Mr. Vernon gave brief indication of the subjects likely to be discussed at the Atlantic City Convention and the part the British delegation may be called on to play in the business of the convention.

Both gentlemen were thanked for their remarks, and the meeting enthusiastically endorsed the resolution of the committee.

THE LONDON TIMES' sudden abandonment of its reader-insurance scheme has given rise to much speculation, particularly in those circles where every movement by the great daily is watched and examined for its significance.

The most frequent criticism has been that it was unprofitable, but this, like all other guesses, is wrong.

The Times' Insurance-of-Readers Scheme was quite a success, in that it added substantially to Times circulation. But it was felt that the paper did not require such a scheme, and that it was capable of holding its own as of yore, without insurance. Accordingly, the new proprietary of the Times took advantage of the expiry of the agreement with the insurance company and did not renew. That was all.

It might perhaps have been expected that this withdrawal of insurance facilities would have resulted in a serious drop in sales, but it says much for the confidence of the present proprietors, as well as being a tribute to the reader-value of the paper itself, that the sales did not actually drop more than a hundred or so, already recovered.

The present policy behind the London Times is finding expression in slight typographical and other changes that are effecting improvements in style without destroying any of its traditional appearance; in fact, the tendency today is to give us back the old London Times and its association, with its authority and dignity conserved.

The present owners of the Times are as jealous of its traditions and its place as an institution in the history of England as was the original John Walter—which is saying much but not less than the truth.

THE British Broadcasting Company, the combination of manufacturers responsible for the radio programs in the United Kingdom, is under close survey by the newspaper societies, watching that the news broadcasted does not imperil the interests of newspaper publishers.

A recent incident shows how energetic is the Newspaper Society in the matter. No broadcasting of news is permitted before 7 p. m., but on the occasion of the University Boat Race, the Broadcasting Company intimated its desire to broadcast a report of the boat race during the progress of the race, at about 5 p. m. Action taken by the Newspaper Society resulted in the statement by the Postmaster-General, who controls wireless services, that no variation of the terms of the license as to broadcasting news would be permitted until the newspaper organization were heard on the matter. The boat race was not broadcast as suggested.

There is a general complaint that the quality of the programs issued by the Broadcasting Stations is of a very ordinary kind, the B. B. C. being limited in its expenditure in this way owing to the lack of funds produced by licenses.

The London Daily Express has intimated that if it can secure permission it will erect a broadcasting station and issue its own programs. Under the arrangement between the Post Office and the B. B. C. it is doubtful whether such a thing can be arranged, but it is indicative of the feeling that exists and of the need for better broadcasting services.

SUN LOSES IN PAPER SUIT

New York High Court Sustains Supply Company in Contract Row

The Court of Appeals at Albany, N. Y., has handed down a decision sustaining the contention of the Remington Paper and Power Company of Watertown, N. Y., in its litigation with the Sun Printing and Publishing Association of New York City. The action was brought to recover $1,510,000 damages for alleged breach of contract by the terms of which the Sun Association was to purchase 16,000 tons of newsprint in 1919.

The paper was to be delivered in installments of 1,000 tons a month at the prices charged by the Canadian Export Paper Company. After 4,000 tons were delivered the Watertown company refused to deliver the balance on the ground that the contract was void for lack of mutuality as the price was indefinite. The court reversed the decision of the Appellate Division, which had reversed Justice Bijur in denying the motion of the Sun Association for judgment on the pleadings. Former Governor Nathan L. Miller represented the Watertown corporation.

Not Resigning as Head of Atlantic Advertising Club—Famous Resort Making Final Preparations for Ad Clubs Convention

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 24.—Leonard D. Algar, resort merchant, although slowly recovering from the effects of recent serious illness, will not resign as president of the Atlantic City Advertising Club. Such was the definite statement issued by A. T. Bell, vice-president of the Atlantic City Advertising Club, who, speaking for President Algar, said that while it had been rumored that he was to resign, no formal resignation was ever made, and it is doubted whether President Algar will make such a demand until the gigantic convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World is held here in June.

While President Algar has not been active of late in the movements of the Atlantic City Advertising Club, it is expected that he will return to his official duties at the next meeting which will be held at the shore Tuesday night, May 1. LUDLOW DISPLAY

Makes Your Space More Valuable

Your space is worth what you make it. Display lines that attract are more important than position. You can't hide them. You can't lose them. You can't pass them without stopping to read.

Commanding display is the first requisite of good advertising: 1. To attract attention; 2. to interest and convince; 3. to induce action. No attention is attracted by old, worn and broken type. The type must be new and perfect. No attention is attracted by thin, compressed faces. Big, bold and extended faces are required. Second-choice faces—for advertisements that come late—destroy the effectiveness of the best written heads.

SHOPPING NEWS ENTERS CLASSIFIED AD FIELD

Cleveland Weekly to Feature New Department Known as "Everybody's Market Place"—"Catch" Ads Barred

CLEVELAND, April 24.—The Cleveland Shopping News will enter the classified advertising field April 30. The rate, according to the management, will be as high as any charged by a Cleveland daily newspaper. The News for some time has been carrying advertising from motion picture houses and theatres. According to an editorial announcement this "new department will be known as 'Everybody's Market Place.'"

The News announcement says:

"Initially, it will take the place of 'Monday Only' specials that are now appearing on page 12. 'Everybody's Market' will have much of the general aspect of the classified advertising one sees in the daily newspapers—and a whole lot more. You'll be bound to regard it as a valuable adjunct to Shopping News."

The publisher claims the News is now delivered weekly to a minimum of 167,000 homes in Greater Cleveland and says tests prove that 95 per cent of each weekly delivery is effective.

It is stated the classified move is made in response to inquiries by "many smaller advertisers who for months have been clamoring for admission."

The News is eighteen months old and its editorial announcement says it has "been a closed corporation—only twenty-two downtown establishments, which own and actually operate the paper having been permitted to advertise in it."

It is added that "householders have wanted to use the News for small advertisements, to employ domestic help, to rent spare rooms, to dispose of used furniture or used automobiles, etc."; also that business and professional men have sought to use the paper "that they might bring their merchandise or their service to the attention of a great many householders they had reason to know depend so much on Shopping News as a buyers' guide." The primary reason assigned for the admission of classified advertising is to increase the service of the News, and "Truth in Advertising" will guide in the printing of the new type of ads.

The News prints "some of the samples of classified advertising 'Everybody's Market Place' won't print."

Here is one of the 'samples" which are barred:

"HELP WANTED—FEMALE.

WE need the services of a young women of attractive personality, good breding, education and character to take responsible position in fast-growing concern. Right woman can earn salary of $75 per week to start. Small investment required. Apply Mr. Allen, Douglas Bldg.

Says the News of this "type" of ad:

NO deception whatever about this advertisement. The opportunity probably is all that it is represented to be—to the right woman. But what of the investment if after the successful applicant has been on the job a while, it is agreed that a mutual mistake has been made? Does she get her money back? Can they give her money back?

"Shopping News feels that is can better protect the interests of its readers, in its inability to predetermine such problems, by declining all help wanted advertisements that calls for an investment."

The deceptive used car ad will also be barred. Another "type" barred is this

HELP WANTED—Female

WOMEN wanted to do work for us at home. No experience necessary. Send 10c in stamps for particulars. Star Service, Blanktown, Ia.

Of this ad the News says:

"HERE we often have the meanest of all classified advertising deceivers—the sharper who capitalizes the desire of the woman struggling to make ends meet with a limited income to earn some extra money. His "particulars," his "home-outfit," his this or that he asks stamps for, is usually worthless, both of itself and in its value for the "home work" described; and costs him for manufacture or printing, not half what the stamps cost the applicant."

"Stuffed house" classified ads will also be barred. Employers seeking help must state whether compensation is on a straight salary or commission basis and ads for either men or women offering to sell stocks will be under the ban. The use of "comparative prices" will also be eliminated.

Sam B. Anson, director of the News, said 50 per cent of the proposed classified ad page has been sold.

DANENBERG BUYS PAPERS

South Norwalk (Conn.) and Stamford Sentinels Under New Leadership

Leigh Danenberg, formerly Berlin correspondent for London and American newspapers and later with the staff of the London Express, has assumed control of the South Norwalk and Stamford (Conn.) Sentinels as head of the Sentinel Publishing Co. The South Norwalk paper is an evening daily established in 1870 by the late James Golden and since his death, 10 years ago, published by his widow and daughter, E. L. and A. L. Golden. The Stamford paper is a morning daily, about two months old, a lively and promising enterprise. The Goldens will retain a financial interest in the two papers through stock holding.

Associated with Mr. Danenberg is Wendell P. Milligan, of Stamford, until recently director of advertising of the Moving Picture World. As vice-president and treasurer Mr. Milligan will have general direction of the business affairs of the two papers.

Robert G. Mitchell, for a number of years city editor, immediately tendered his resignation. Other changes will be made in the staffs of both papers in the near future.

McKeever Buys Out Partner

J. H. McKeever has bought the interest of his partner, E. P. Neill, in the Aberdeen (S. D.) American Company, publisher of the Morning American, Evening News and Sunday American-News, and will henceforth conduct the newspapers alone. No changes in the staff are contemplated. F. W. Meyers will remain as Sunday editor, Leonard Lindgren as managing editor of the American and Sam Y. Hasvold, managing editor of the News. C. D. Kimball of Minneapolis will succeed Mr. Neill as manager of the plant. Mrs. McKeever will become a member of the Associated Press on behalf of the News, as her husband is for the American. The sale included Mr. Neill's half interest in the American Building and his interest in the American Print Shop, a job printing company which grew out of the business.

Journalism Student Awards

The loving cup offered by Sigma Delta Chi, at Oregon Agricultural College, to the student in journalism getting the most material in print went to Kenneth Ackley, of Chapman, Ore. First prizes in other contests went to Laurence Trowbridge, of Portland; Cyril Sikes, of Corvallis, and George Couper, of Portland. Other prize winners were Lindsey Spight, of Hood River; Eunice Rydman, of Portland; Vernon Paine, of Portland, and Katharine Marshall, of Gervais.

Bryan's Commoner Quits

The Commoner, of Lincoln, Neb., founded by William Jennings Bryan and edited with him in co-ordination with his brother, Governor C. W. Bryan of Nebraska, suspended publication April 10 after a career of twenty-two years. Lack of time was given by the governor as the reason.

In Planning Your New Building—

YOU can now have the assistance of an organization which has developed and is developing plans for several major newspaper buildings (among them the production design and layout of the New York Tribune's new building).

This organization specializes solely in newspaper, publishing and printing buildings and includes technical engineers specializing in the various phases of newspaper operation and building design and construction, all coordinated under the direction of a trained newspaper man.

Such a service has never before been available. What it has accomplished will be explained in an interview which may be arranged without obligation.

THE ADVERTISER AND THE MEDIUM

Advertising aims, methods, results have developed greatly in recent years.

Advertising has come to be recognized as salesmanship's most forceful factor.

It moves goods to quick turnovers and speedy profits, and builds and preserves reputations for merchandise that grow into tremendous assets.

Only advertising that is an honest, informing, assuring voice to the buyer is of much permanent value.

The merchandise and performance must thoroughly back up every statement made, whether direct or implied.

The good advertising business message is not only keen, clear-cut, and convincing in its construction, but is carried by messengers (media) in whose advertising contents the public confidence has grown stronger and stronger each year.

The newspaper has become the ideal advertising medium. Every intelligent man and woman in the land reads it daily. It is welcome in every home, and the honest, straight-forward business messages therein are greeted in a spirit of good will that adds to the response.

We are the National Advertising Representatives of TWENTY PROGRESSIVE NEWSPAPERS in that many fine cities of the United States.

We are equipped to lay before any interested advertiser, or advertising agency, a vast amount of up-to-the-minute information regarding the market opportunities and publicity advantages of those cities, whenever and wherever you say.

IDEAS WHICH HAVE GIVEN VITALITY TO ADVERTISING CAMPAIGNS

EGGS "with a personality," properly advertised, should be sold on a quality basis, the Massachusetts Extension Service News advocates. It advises eggs so marked to be, first, of highest quality, carefully graded and guaranteed; second, packed attractively; and third, advertised.

After explaining how the first two points may be realized in cultivating local or near-by logical markets, the egg producer is advised:

"To let established customers and prospective purchasers know where to go for such a class of eggs (for which a large demand is waiting) the eggs should be covered with a trade-mark which will establish their identity. And they should be advertised."

"To push sales faster, newspaper advertising would be of decided advantage." It recommends that where co-operative advertising is to be conducted for eggs, a few producers whose grades are uniform will do better to work together rather than too large a group with too many diversified grades.

AN automobile placed upside down gave a dramatic form to recent advertising of the Essex car. A large car, with wheels in air and top on the floor was exhibited standing on a show-room surface.

"To prove its staunchness, the coach is exhibited this way," the heading explained. "Just as you would turn over a box, we rolled an Essex coach on its top to show its strong rigid body construction.

"In this position the body is supporting the weight of the car, 2,700 pounds. There is not even the slighest sag or bend for windows and doors operate freely. Come, see how also by economical design and quantity production it is possible to get closed car comforts on a first class chassis at moderate price."

Details then were given of the car's various sales points.

MILK should be advertised as a food, not a beverage, the milk dealer urged in a recent issue.

"Men and organizations which contemplate a milk advertising campaign often differ when attempting to choose a slogan. Some prefer to advise folks to 'drink more milk' while others insist on 'Eat more milk.'

"Both are good, but we feel that advising consumers to drink more milk is but telling part of the wonderful story of milk. Most folks drink all the milk they want. Many don't like milk. Advertising which suggests drinking more milk than they want doesn't appeal to such folks, unless they are looking for medicine.

"'Eat more milk,' backed by many suggestions as to uses, is the more desirable, it is explained for creating the greatest consumption of milk."

PRACTICALLY 2,000 cameras were distributed at Oakland, Cal., a short time ago in a special stunt staged in co-operation with the Eastman Kodak Company. That concern in large centers is giving away cameras free to all who purchase $1.50 worth of film.

"We had figured that if we gave out 250 at this time of the year it would show very satisfactory results," R. A. Leet, secretary of the Bowman Drug Company, Oakland, Cal., said. It was out of season.

"We were, however, completely off in our calculation. We made three announcements prior to the distribution in the Oakland papers on the three evenings preceding the event. Delivery began Saturday, January 27, at 9 o'clock. Within two hours we had given out the entire original one thousand and during the day we booked orders for over nine hundred more and received $1.50 from each customer for the three packages of films that go with each free camera."

THE American Woolen Company a short time ago used newspaper space in a bid for custom work. Under the title, "When the nearest is best," the Riverina Mills of the company at Medford Hillside, Mass., said in newspaper copy:

"You have a two-fold reason for having your custom work done at Riverina Mills.

"Nearest to Boston—only five miles distant—with direct rail connections, sidings, mill track and every facility for rapid delivery, this plant, one of the best equipped in the world, offers you highest class work and service at lowest possible price consistent with high-grade work. You save on freight, trucking and hauling expenses and eliminate delays through traffic congestion."

SHOE repairing is compared with the skilled professions in advertising being used by the United Shoe Repairing Machine Company of Boston for the purpose of boosting business of cobblers who have installed its Goodyear Welt Shoe Repairing System.

"The doctor, the lawyer, the electrical engineer, the scientist, all must pass through a long period of training under skilled masters before the coveted diploma is awarded," the copy points out. "Even then he remains but one of a vast number unless he becomes a specialist.

"Shoe repairing, which has long been on a low standard, has now reached a dignity of an honorable art, through the establishment of the Goodyear Welt Shoe Repairing System of inspection and official sign. This sign is a certificate or diploma awarded only to those who have reached and maintained the highest standards of skill and efficiency in their work.

"This sign is removed by the United States Shoe Repairing Machine Company—its owners—when its experts find that the quality of work has fallen below the required standard." The names of shoe repair shops are listed.

CO-OPERATIVE advertising on behalf of New York taxis is being urged.

"There are not too many taxicabs in New York. There are too few people using them because taxi owners are not well enough organized," it is stated. "If the majority were organized, it could weed out and keep out black sheep from the business, raise the standards of courtesy and service, have each man working for a common interest, educate the public to patronize the taxicabs 50 per cent more than at present, and make more money.

"The cost of an effective advertising campaign would be small, if pro-rated. . . . Increased business would be felt."

Fire Halts Ohio Weekly

The plant of the Alger (Ohio) V News was badly damaged by a fire 16. Publication was suspended for weeks while new accommodations being secured.

Here's a financial and business news syndicate located in the middle west, Mr. Managing Editor.

THE CHICAGO JOURNAL OF COMMERCE SYNDICATE is in the field to help you with your business and financial pages. Expert writers in the various departments are ready to serve you.

The CHICAGO JOURNAL OF COMMERCE SYNDICATE is prepared to give you prompt and efficient service by wire on exclusive news of the business world or to work on assignment. Its highly specialized equipment is at your command. Here are some of the mail and wire features for which exclusive territorial rights are granted:

Financial Tables

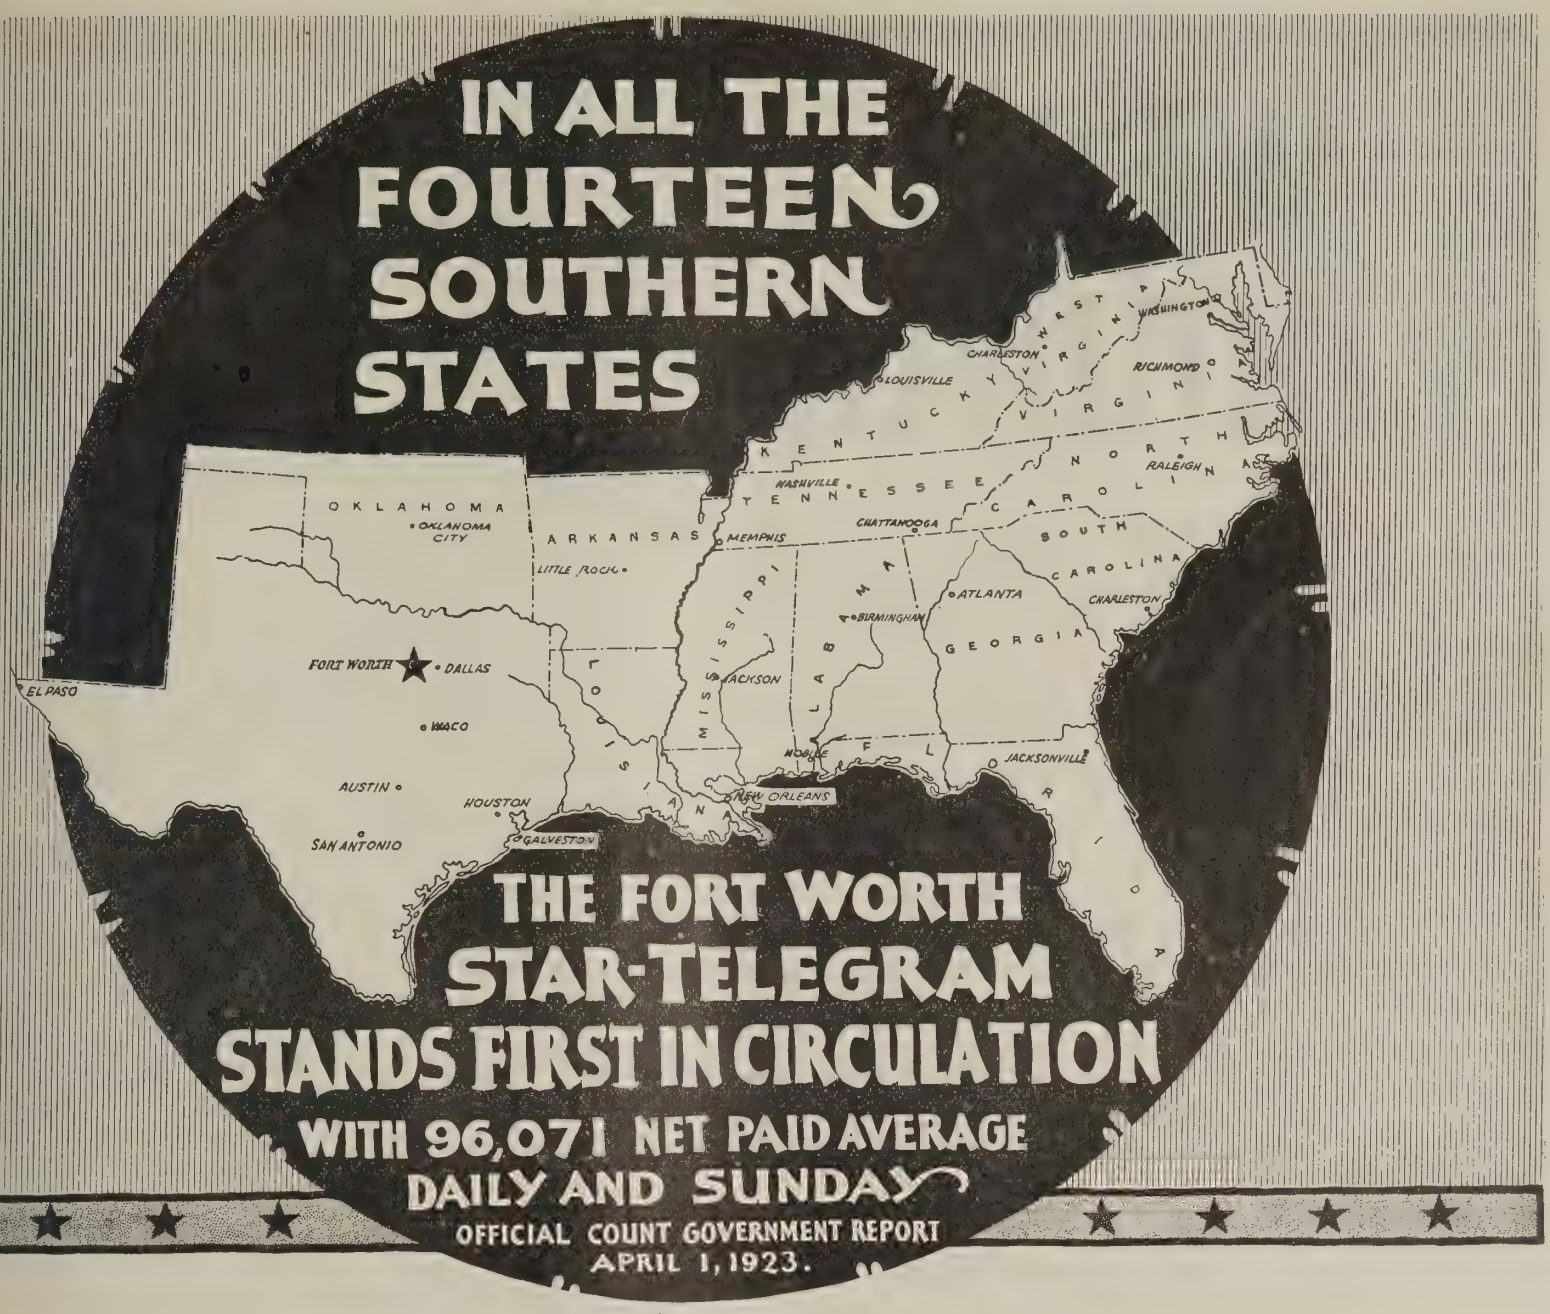
The Syndicate is able to deliver by mail on Sunday afternoon for Monday morning publication the most complete set of security market quotations in existence. These are New York stocks, New York bonds, New York Curb, Chicago stocks, and Boston Curb. The tables are delivered in proof form, carefully proof read, and revised exactly as they appear in the CHICAGO JOURNAL OF COMMERCE on Monday morning. They are not taken from some broker's blackboard, but are compiled directly from the tickers and checked with the different stock exchanges over our own leased wires.

Mirror of the Week's Trade

Few newspapers in the country can afford to keep highly specialized writers on all of the departments that go to make up their business and financial pages. The CHICAGO JOURNAL OF COMMERCE has experts who present once a week as concretely as possible the situation in all the various lines. The service, which makes two columns, is sent out in proof form or Friday of each week for release the following Monday It is mailed "special delivery" to such papers as are close enough to Chicago for that purpose, and wired to others.

Weekly Review of Livestock Situation in Middle West

This is a feature which is very popular with news papers having a large number of farmer readers. I is written under the nom de plume "Western Ranger" and presents the subject in a manner that is informative to the farmer who handles livestock. The feature is mailed in proof form in time for release on Monday morning.



Financist

This feature consists of analyses of the bond situation from the investment house standpoint, and is the sort of material which holds the attention of the fellow who spends real money in advertising pages. The feature runs from 400 to 600 words daily, and is served by wire for immediate release.

LET THE CHICAGO JOURNAL OF COMMERCE SYNDICATE help you make your business pages of greater appeal to your business readers. You can buy anything in the Chicago Journal of Commerce that meets your needs. Wire or write Syndicate Manager for further information and terms.

POWER TO BUY

Fuel minerals flow out of West Virginia in a steady stream, and gold—gold to spend for the things that make life worthwhile—flows back in.

The three most necessary minerals to industry—coal, petroleum and gas—comprise more than 90% of the state's mineral output.

West Virginia's annual output of COAL is worth $193,108,343 while the income derived from PETROLEUM and NATURAL GAS is $99,518,304.

The mining of these products calls for the employment of men of experience and training who command high wages. High wages mean a similar height of buying power.

WEST VIRGINIA has money to spend, and National Advertisers should use, extensively, the dailies listed below, to show these people how their dollars can bring the best returns.

NEW ASSESSMENT PLAN ADOPTED BY A. P.

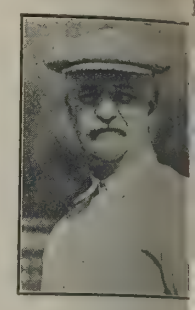
service, a State mail service, or a special service of any kind, his contribution toward the cost of such service is added to his basic assessment as an individual charge.



"The method of arriving at the wire charge is as follows: Every city served must have at least one wire to bring to it and carry from it the news of the world. As it is manifestly impossible successfully to operate a single wire connecting all of the Associated Press cities of the United States, it becomes necessary to arrange circuits that may efficiently serve the various parts of the country. Taking each State as a unit, it is possible to operate a State circuit connecting the various cities therein, but to give a comprehensive news service it is also necessary to have trunk circuits to link together the several State circuits. As the State units could not receive a comprehensive news service without the existence of these trunk lines, this plan assesses as a wire charge to each State the proportion of the cost of the trunk service that serves it and the entire cost of the State circuit where one exists. If the membership within a State does not justify a State circuit, regional circuits embracing two or more States are established and the costs of such circuits are assessed directly against the cities served. The State wire charge is distributed according to population, so that each city within a given State pays the same wire rate per thousand of population. As the leasing rate for day wires is higher than for night wires, the wire charge is divided proportionately between the morning and evening fields on the basis of rental charged by the wire companies for the hours of service utilized by each field. The evening paper proportion is 57 per cent, the morning and Sunday morning 43 per cent. The wire charge also includes the salaries of sending operators and filing editors.

"The local charge is the salary of the operators and messengers required to deliver the news service to each city. The charge includes 5 per cent of the total salaries paid to provide for vacations and emergencies. This charge is divided according to actual hours of service in each field, evening or morning.

"Expenses of the organization not specifically covered in the above items are provided for in a general charge which is allotted to and assessed against each State, according to the State's percentage of the literate population of the United States, as shown by the 1920 census. This State allotment is apportioned to the evening and the morning fields on the following basis: As the afternoon papers are served only six days a week, while service is available to morning papers seven days or nights, the afternoon field is charged with 6/13, or 46 per cent, of the State allotment and the morning field 7/13, or 54 per cent; the sum, or six days and seven days or nights, making 13. Before the state allotment is redistributed within the State by city population, each field is credited with the amount of net pony revenue received from its field in such State. In this manner each field has an advantage from the Associated Press development. States where there is a considerable development, either pony report or leased wire, benefit by a lower general charge. As in the wire charge, each city in a State pays the same general rate per thousand of population. Assessments in accordance with this plan have been gradually put into effect.

"The board records with satisfaction that less than a half-dozen members who hold protest rights are exercising those rights beyond ten miles from the city of publication. It believes it is for the best interests of the organization that the comparatively few holding such rights since the year 1900 should not exercise them, and appreciate the co-operative spirit of the great majority who have waived the in the common interest.

"Fourteen former employes were the pension roll during 1922, two of o loyal veterans having died since the clo of the year, Addison C. Thomas, at Ch cago, and W. A. Connor, at Philadelphia. They typified the loyalty to the Associated Press which characterizes our staff. Disability benefits were paid during the year to 263 employes, and death benefits to the heirs of 13 employes. The total charges against the pension, disability and death benefit fund were approximately $55,000, all of which by vote the board had been ordered paid back the fund, which on January 1 stood credited with $119,125.

A. N. McKay
Chairman Western D vision Advisory Board

"The receipts for the calendar year 1922 were $5,989,293.23. The expenditures were $6,012,856.58, an excess ov income of $23,563.35. The board wa purposely liberal in charging to gener expense many thousands of dollars of ex penditure in order that increases in a sessment might be postponed. The Emer gency Reserve Fund is now compose entirely of United States bonds, of a fac value of $500,000.

"The board congratulates the member ship upon the spirit that pervades th personnel of the organization. The me are alert, careful, indefatigable and tru to the highest tenets of our professio Service for the Associated Press con tinues increasingly to be a badge of hon orable journalism. Outstanding storie like those in connection with the buria of the Unknown Solider at Arlington are not so rare as might be supposed We believe that we gave to our paper the best reports written of such varie events as the conference at Lausann and of the Herrin (Ill.) catastrophe—t select but one foreign and one America example. Our staff man at Herrin riske his life to give you a true and accurat account of the event. The report of th trial of those involved in the deplorabl affair was praised for its unbiased ac curacy by both counsel for the accuse and the prosecution. And there is th case of our operator at Daytona, Fla who, when the electric light plant failed copied the report for 25 minutes in com plete darkness, with but two errors, on a transposition of letters and the othe the use of a wrong capital.

committee expressed itself as of pinion "that, while a minority of associations may have engaged in es which have laid them open to nt under the law with respect to nts of trade, the vast majority have l their great value for the advance- tday by day, of the processes of pro- n and distribution."

e possibility that a trade associa- ay err by violating a statute no ustifies any attempt on the part of e mental authority to control trade ctions in all their activities than the ility of illegal acts on the part of uals warrants like supervision over r actions. Such supervision would bly restrict the freedom of action of trade associations in meeting the problems which they exist to solve."

The committee laid down as its recommendations three rules with relation to the statistical activities of trade associations, as follows:

"Reports of members to their association should be accurate and sufficiently complete to prevent misconstruction.

"As distributed to the membership, the statistics should not be accompanied with any interpretation or other comment which could induce or facilitate concerted action on the part of members.

"All statistics regarding prices should be confined to closed transactions, and should not refer to pending transactions or future transactions."

Summarizing its conclusions, the committee said:

"The committee believes that trustworthy information concerning capacity, production, stocks, sales, and prices is essential to the effective operation of industry and trade under competitive conditions. The voluntary reporting of such information to trade associations and the subsequent publication and dissemination of such information in a manner which makes it available not only to contributors but also to consumers and to the public generally is beneficial alike to the field of business and the public and does not constitute a restraint of trade."

PEACE THROUGH UNDERSTANDING

WORLD Court does not mean much as phrases go—a great many fine phrases have been woven around the greatest desire of man, namely, a peace established upon the justice of understanding among men.

It is to the credit of the President of the United States that he did not plead in his speech at the luncheon of the Associated Press. He made the most important announcement since the beginning of his administration but he did not argue, did not quibble. He made a statement of fact.

It is a high compliment to the profession of which the editor of the Marion Star is a member that in his high position he chose the fellows of his own craft as the interpreters of his international desires to the country.

There is nothing political and nothing to fight about among ourselves as partisans over the announcement of our national leader that we must shoulder a part of the burden that is necessary to a peace established by debate instead of the force of arms.

President Harding did not expound the doctrine of any political party when he advocated the settlement of international disputes just as serious differences between individuals are settled by our courts today; he talked religion as it has come to us from Christ.

We should be proud of the fact that we are of a nation that measures its strength by confident belief in the doctrine, do unto others as you would have others do unto you.

The newspaper men of America can render their greatest service to their country at this time by following our President propounding the merits of debate over war.

AN AMERICAN'S CREED

COMPILED BY CHARLES W. MILLER,
Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald

IN the house of the righteous is much treasure: but in the revenues of the wicked is trouble. The lips of the wise disperse knowledge: but the heart of the foolish doeth not so.—(Prov. xv: 6, 7.) Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Do all things without murmurings and disputings: That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world; Holding forth the word of life that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in neither laboured in vain.—(Philippians ii: 3, 14-16.) Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure.—(I. John iii: 2, 3.)

AN UNNECESSARY EVIL

NATIONAL advertisers spent $200,000,000 in newspapers last year, almost as much as they spent in 1920. Results of even that frenzied period taught them that newspapers are the unsurpassed media for the sale of goods. Yet, ten years ago, when the A. N. P. A. Bureau of Advertising began its work, national advertising totalled only about $60,000,000 a year. It didn't pay many newspaper bills. Then, even more than now, the prime factor was the copy of local merchants, whose success through newspaper advertising showed the manufacturer the straightest road between factory and consumer.

And in spite of that, 1923 sees the merchants of several large cities, unwilling to pay the newspapers what it costs to print their advertising, wasting their time and money in handbill advertising that they call "Shopping News."

The rosy past and future that the Cleveland Shopping News promoters recently painted for the National Retail Dry Goods Association is not indicated in the announcement this week that classified advertising will be sold to the public, replacing the "Monday Special" bargains that have featured the circular since its start 18 months ago. The public won't buy, on Monday, goods that are advertised Saturday in a throwaway handbill. Many people can't be lured to the stores on Monday even by Sunday newspaper advertising whose merit is proved and undoubted.

But, just as the Cleveland folks find that Monday bargain advertising on Saturday is a dead animal, their brethren in New Haven decide that the same kind of a circular is sure to make Monday a first-rank shopping day, which it never was, even before the stores' advertising was barred from two evening papers thirty months ago. That reason, of course, is not true. It cloaks merely another attempt to beat these papers into submission to department store terms on rates, to a return to the days when the merchants kept the newspapers on the edge of bankruptcy and submissive to their mercantile masters. Those merchants don't want strong, independent newspapers which print the truth regardless of a store owner's prejudices against it. They want publishers who look forward to old age on the county farm. And they are beaten now—their books tell them that they can't get along without the two papers who deny their right to dictate, and their Shopping News is a futile stopgap.

It is difficult to imagine merchants who formed a trust to buy newspaper space at 15 cents an inch a few years ago spending $80,000 a year on a circular which would have to bring in $2,400,000 worth of Monday business to maintain their alleged sales-advertising ratio. The task is impossible and it seems safe to predict that the New Haven sheet will find a place beside its deceased Pittsburgh counterpart.

That was an expensive venture for the merchants who failed to see through its flimsy fabric. The newspapers lost nothing. They gained some new prospects. Most of the larger merchants stuck to straight newspaper advertising and let their foolish contemporaries finance the handbill promoters. These found that few lines of merchandise were adaptable to circular advertising and that give-away inducements were needed to bring the public into their stores.

One curious and enlightening angle to the Pittsburgh situation is that the stores did not act as a unit in the handbill enterprise, as do the Cleveland and the New Haven merchants, while the Pittsburgh newspapers are well accustomed to co-operation on business matters of mutual concern, as the New Haven publishers are not.

In Pittsburgh the Shopping News was never a serious factor as a newspaper competitor. In New Haven it may be because the New Haven publishers won't play as a team against store owners who won't play otherwise than in concert in their dealings with the press. If the two New Haven newspapers that are now printing the retail business which their fellows refuse, the store fight would be broken in a fortnight. The best answer to the Shopping News would be to let the merchants try to meet payrolls on the returns that two issues brought in without the help of newspaper copy. There would be no ghost for the store employes the second week. Newspapers which play the game of a merchants' combine against fellow newspapers can't look for mercy from the merchants when the latter win their fight, nor for aid from the publishers they deserted when help was needed.

Trust and confidence, not cutthroat competition, is the prescription for all publishers when advertisers seek to dictate the newspapers' conduct.

THE POSTAL BREAKDOWN

THE finest thing about conventions is not the f that you are given an opportunity to give pression to your own pet theories, but that rules compel you to listen to the other fellows'.

The present conventions of the Associated Pr and American Newspaper Publishers' Association among the largest in the history of those organi tions and the week will mark the first real effort bring the editorial men together when the Ameri Society of Newspaper Editors holds its first import meeting.

The American Newspaper Publishers' Associat is interested primarily in the business side of ne paper-making, but one problem taken up by it t is of importance to every branch of newspap making is postal service.

Mail service has today reached its low ebb. fact, it is doubtful if the service was even as irregu during the war period as it is now. Then there w excuses that were acceptable, if not convinci That does not hold good now.

Postal communications is just as important to editorial department of the daily newspaper as it to the business department, and it is a subject t should not be ignored at the Washington conventi

It is all very well for responsible department he to talk about financial deficiencies, but mail deliv is still a government service and not a busin obligation fulfilled for profit, and the sooner sc politicians are taught this fact the better.

Better postal service is one problem that ne the attention of all newspaper men.

SPIKING FIBS IN CIRCULATION

TEN years ago American newspaper circulat claims were given the same credence as present-day claims of distribution that are be made for Shopping News publications.

Today a statement of a newspaper's total circu tion is generally accepted as fact. Much of credit for this must go to the Audit Bureau of culations. It is doubtful if any other agency ever done as much toward forcing honesty in st ment from the business of which it was a depend part.

However, the most revolutionary action of A. B. C. was taken this week when a resolution passed compelling members to file advertised cir lation claims at the time audits are made and at same time setting forth penalties to be suffered those deviating from the truth.

Truth is the first principle of lasting busin success. It has no value unless it comes from witl and that is what the new rule of the A. B. C. re means.

IT is pretty easy to raise a cry against press agen but to secure action is another matter. The as it exists today is not going to be cured by re lution although such action is helpful because attracts attention to the subject. It is doubt whether the men and women most concerned e nomically—those who staff the daily press—h ever been awakened to the dangers of the pres practice of half a wage from their employers half from the self-seekers of public favor who luxuries to a mere existence. The publishers' pr agent problem is rooted in the newspaper family the cure will not be found in well-worded resolv

"I THINK the journalist's profession is a very one for a boy to choose," wrote a seventh gr boy in the public schools of Detroit recently. his essay he showed a surprising knowledge of work of Benjamin Franklin, Horace Greeley, Ja A. PERSONALS

F. IRVINE, editor of the Portland (Ore.) Journal, is in great demand as a public speaker. His most recent appearance on the platform was at Milwaukee, where he spoke on "The American Public Schools."

Mrs. James Keeley and her two daughters, the Misses Margaret and Ruth Keeley, of Chicago, will return home from Europe the last of May.

John Hourigan, publisher of the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) Evening News, recently held a house-warming for the employees of his newspaper and their families in the new home of the News. During the evening Mr. Hourigan was presented with a handsome silver writing set by the men of all departments.

Herbert R. Galt, managing editor of the St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press, is confined to his home by illness. Roy Dunlap is acting in his place.

W. A. Gracey is observing the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Geneva (N. Y.) Daily Times, of which he is editor.

James P. Bicket, managing editor of the Chicago Evening American, ran into a round of dinners, parties, automobile rides, and golf matches, that kept him busy for three days, when he went to Ogden, Utah, to present the Ogden High School national rifle champions with gold medals donated by William Randolph Hearst. A. L. Glasmann, editor of the Ogden Standard-Examiner, and Al. Warner, sports editor, arranged the entertainments.

John H. Harrison, editor of the Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News, delivered the principal address in Chicago, April 21, at the state convention of the Illinois Motion Picture Exhibitors.

Walter W. Whitman, one of the owners of the Pleasantville (N. J.) Press, is the new postmaster of Pleasantville.

William C. Deming, the new president of the United States Civil Service Commission, is the owner of the Cheyenne (Wyo.) State Tribune and the Stock-Farmer, which he founded in 1912. He was formerly editor of the Warren (Ohio) Daily Tribune and at the time of his appointment as Civil Service Commissioner by President Harding was a trustee of the Carnegie Library at Cheyenne, Wyo., vice-president of the Services Warren Pershing Memorial Hospital and president of the Board of Trustees of the University of Wyoming.

J. W. Miller of New York was at the Waldorf for the Gotham Newspaper Service corporation, of which he is a director.

Dr. Andrew Cherna, publisher of the Hadsag, a Hungarian daily newspaper of Cleveland, has purchased for $150,000, control of an 80 feet frontage and 165 feet depth of the Homeopathic Medical College Building, a five-story structure, on Huron Road, Cleveland.

Lieutenant E. C. Whitehead who last year suffered a ducking in Lake Michigan in an attempt to get food to marooned people on Fox Island, near Northport, Mich., is a former newspaperman. He was with the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Daily Headlight before the World War and after his discharge from the army was a reporter for the Topeka Daily Capital. Later he re-entered the aviation service.

Webber Nations, publisher of the Jefferson City (Mo.) Daily Post, has been appointed state labor commissioner of Missouri by Governor Hyde.

Charles P. Beebe, editor of the Neodesha (Kan.) Daily Sun, has been elected president of the Neodesha Rotary Club.

J. R. Waggoner of the Kansas City (Kan.) Journal, formerly with the Wichita Eagle and before that managing editor of the Hutchinson Gazette, has been named assistant state fire marshal of Kansas.

John F. Hull, former president of the Missouri Press Association and editor of the Marysville Tribune has been named postmaster of his city by President Harding.

Victor B. Smith, who resigned recently as managing editor of the Omaha Bee, has been appointed manager of the new business department of the Omaha National bank.

Frederick Leighton, superintendent of public schools in Oswego, N. Y., has purchased a one-half interest in the Oswego Evening Times and will take possession about May 1. With Mr. Leighton will be associated his nephew, Clarence Leighton, now of the financial department of the Buffalo Evening News. Edwin M. Waterbury, formerly of the Corning (N. Y.) Leader, is the third partner.

Clinton Brainerd of the Wheeler Syndicate and McClure's Syndicate dropped in to meet convention friends and look over the feature syndicate exhibits.

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOMS

ED NEWTON, veteran Texas capitol newspaper man, has become statehouse correspondent of the Galveston News, following the sale of the News by the A. H. Belo Company, and its separation from the Dallas News.

Michael Curry, formerly of the Buffalo (N. Y.) Enquirer, has joined the Buffalo Commercial staff as police reporter.

Ralph Turner has been appointed assistant financial editor of the Buffalo Evening News to succeed Clarence Leighton, who has purchased an interest in the Oswego Evening Times.

William Margolf has returned to the reportorial staff of the St. Paul Pioneer Press after two years' absence, during which he did publicity work.

Michael Halloran, late city editor of the Minneapolis News, has gone to the Minneapolis Tribune.

Kenneth W. Mayo, formerly of the Lincoln (Neb.) bureau of the Associated Press, is now the correspondent of that organization at Sioux Falls, S. D., succeeding Donald Mackay, who resigned because of ill health.

Grenville Pridham, telegraph editor of the Wausau (Wis.) Record-Herald, is now with the Louisville (Ky.) Times.

Mrs. Fred Scott, for several years society editor of the Austin (Tex.) Statesman, has resigned and gone to Pasadena, Cal.

James Duball, sporting editor of The Bellingham (Wash.) Herald, has resigned to go to Southern California. He has been succeeded by Frank Wright of Bellingham.

Guy Housley, of the Chicago Daily Journal copy desk, entertained members of the Journal editorial staff at his home in Berwyn, Ill., last Saturday evening.

E. C. Norlander, formerly assistant city editor of the Chicago Daily Journal, who has been in Texas recuperating from a serious illness, is expected to return to his position soon.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

THE advertising world probably knows G. Logan Payne best as a special advertising representative, but the success he has made of the Washington (D. C.) Herald and the Washington Times since he has been their directing head is fast earning him new laurels as a newspaper publisher.

G. Logan Payne

In October, 1921, Mr. Payne left his "special's" office in Chicago to take charge of the Washington Times for William R. Hearst and when, in November, 1922, Mr. Hearst bought the Washington Herald, Mr. Payne was placed in charge of both papers.

The progress the Times and the Herald have made under Mr. Hearst's ownership, according to those best in position to know, is the direct result of the spirit which Mr. Payne has put into the Washington organization. Each Monday Mr. Payne calls a luncheon conference of his executives, and it is at these meetings that the splendid Times and Herald enthusiasm has been builded. Mr. Payne gives his organization full credit for the strides being made by his papers. He says: "I want every man in this organization to feel that he is individually responsible for the whole organization's success or failure, and so he is. A man who is thinking constructively and enthusiastically is building successfully. Every department head is a builder, let us all remember that; we are builders."

The Washington Times is a six-day evening paper and was taken over from Arthur Brisbane just after the war by William Randolph Hearst. In November, 1922, Mr. Hearst also bought the Washington Herald, a morning newspaper, and combined the Sunday Herald with the Sunday Times under the name Times-Herald. The morning Herald was continued. On April 22 Mr. Hearst changed the name of his Washington Sunday paper to the Washington Herald, thereby making the Herald seven days morning, and the Washington Times six days evening.

Parke Brown is the newly appointed political editor of the Chicago Daily Tribune, succeeding E. O. Phillips.

Mrs. Tip O'Neill, wife of the managing editor of the Wausau (Wis.) Record-Herald, and family are now residents of Wausau, having motored over from Lansing, Mich.

Mildred Helen Fox, formerly with the Mullaly Advertising Agency and later with Barton, Durstine & Osborn at Buffalo, N. Y., has become society editor of the Tucson (Ariz.) Daily Star.

S. A. Stoddard, in charge of the Anaconda bureau of the Butte Miner, has returned to his post after a two months' absence as representative of Deer Lodge county in the state legislature.

D. A. Brislin, former telegraph editor of the Scranton Republican, is now mechanical superintendent for the Sunday Dispatch.

"Chick" Feldman of the Scranton Telegram has been elected president of the Industrial Baseball League in that city.

Tom Lynott, of the Scranton Times staff, branched out as an amateur minstrel man recently, starring in the K. of C. annual production in Scranton.

Larry Smith, formerly of the Scranton Republican, is now a member of the news staff on the Pittston Gazette.

E. J. Hart of the Scranton Times was recently tendered a dinner by members of the Legislative Correspondents' Association in Harrisburg. Mr. Hart is past president of this organization.

S. L. Lyksett, formerly a reporter for the Sioux Falls (S. D.) Press, is now on the city hall run for the Omaha (Neb.) Daily News.

William A. Haffert, editor of the Cape May County (N. J.) Times, has been appointed clerk of the Small Board of Chosen Freeholders of Cape May County.

Miss Ruth Osborn Ewan, formerly society editor of the Ventnor (N. J.) News, Atlantic City Mirror and Amusements, published by Charles Scheurer, has been made editor of the Boardwalk Illustrated News.

Miss Dorothy Cleveland, former New York newspaper woman, is now on the staff of the Atlantic City Boardwalk Illustrated News.

Charles Alexander, Sunday editor of the Albany (N. Y.) Democrat, is rejoicing in the arrival of a nine-pound daughter at his home. This is the third child and second daughter born to Mr. and Mrs. Alexander.

Charles H. Vaughn has been appointed a reporter on the Sandusky (O.) Register. He was formerly on the Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

Barney Bertman has resumed the duties of real estate editor of the Camden (N. J.) Daily Courier after a year's absence during which he was admitted to the bar.

The Haskin Service has been used continuously by the Chicago Daily News for eighteen years, and another renewal has been made.

Norville W. Sharpe, formerly with the St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch, has been named sports editor of the Atlantic City (N. J.) Gazette-Review, succeeding Arthur S. Grossman, who resigned to go with the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

B. Frank Alcott, formerly with the Atlantic City (N. J.) Gazette-Review and the Camden (N. J.) Daily Courier, has been appointed secretary to Mayor Victor King of Camden.

Donald E. Basenfelder, after a three months' absence, has returned to the Atlantic City (N. J.) Gazette-Review. He was formerly sports editor of the Atlantic City Sunday Gazette.

Spick Hall, sports writer on the Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger, has switched over to the Evening Bulletin.

Ted Hoyt, formerly golf editor of the old Philadelphia Press has joined the sports staff of the Evening Public Ledger.

Ernest A. Talbot, staff reporter on the Atlantic City (N. J.) Daily Press, has been made county editor of the Evening Union, both of which are published by the Press-Union Company.

Floyd Gibbons of the Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service is heading a Chicago Tribune exploration party which is now crossing the Sahara desert from North Africa to Timbuctoo, a journey, which is expected to take several months. He is traveling in true desert fashion with a camel caravan and extensive equipment and will cover practically unexplored territory on his route.

Edward Gibbons of the Chicago Tribune has just returned to America after traveling throughout Europe for the circulation department of the European Edition of the Chicago Tribune in Paris. He will henceforth make his headquarters in Chicago.

Edwin Hullinger, formerly Moscow correspondent of the United Press, is in New York putting the final touches to a new book on Russia which will appear early this summer.

John Clayton, who has been in the Ruhr for the Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service has just taken a flying trip to Denmark.

O. C. McLaughlin, police reporter for the Springfield (Ohio) Daily News, is suffering from pleurisy. His condition is reported to be serious.

G. E. Merrick, a former Old Mexico newspaper man, has joined the editorial staff of the Mediator.

C. V. Rice, associate editor and advertising manager of the Liberal (Kan.) Democrat, has resigned to enter the oil business at Sayre, Okla. Mr. Rice is succeeded by W. E. Clark, of Wichita.

John A. Reed, manager of the Palace Theater at Wichita, Kan., and formerly connected with the Wichita Eagle, has returned to that paper as news editor, a new position.

THE BUSINESS OFFFICE

JOHN A. DICKSON of the Chicago Herald & Examiner spent the past week in French Lick, Ind.

Miss Anne McDonald, head of the foreign advertising department of the Salt Lake Telegram for the last year, has returned to the Butte (Mont.) Miner.

Fred J. Runze for the past nine years director of Murray's Newspaper Service and editor of the "Ad Man," has been elected vice-president and director of the Fourth Estate, New York. Mr. Runze will also act as general manager of the publication.

W. L. Lindsay has joined advertising staff of the Birmingham Post. He was formerly display man and assistant advertising manager of Caheen's Department Store, Birmingham.

Louis Bleser has been appointed advertising manager of the St. Nicholas Magazine, New York.

William G. Hobson has been appointed manager national advertising of the New York Evening Journal to succeed William N. Callender, Jr., recently resigned. Mr. Hobson has for several years been manager of the merchandising service department of the Journal and will continue to direct all merchandising work.

Gordon L. Smedley has assumed the duties of advertising manager of the Reading (Pa.) Times and Herald-Telegram. He has been advertising manager of the Pensacola Journal.

W. F. Patten, formerly advertising and promotion manager of the Sinclair Oil Company, Chicago, has joined the advertising staff of the Milwaukee Sentinel.

Robert Henri has resigned as classified advertising manager of the Fresno (Cal.) Bee to become general promotion and classified advertising manager of the Los Angeles Record.

IN THE ADVERTISING FIELD

VICTOR C. BREYTSPRAAK of Chicago will join the Kling-Gibson Advertising Company's staff, that city, discontinuing the agency bearing his name.

The Advertising Service Company, of San Francisco, which for the last five years has handled Liggett & Myers advertising on the Pacific Coast and other important accounts, has been reorganized under the name of Kelsey-Mooney-Stedem, Inc. E. N. Kelsey, who has been conducting the business, will be president. A. F. A. Stedem, vice-president, is an old Lord & Thomas man and was until recently connected with the Honig-Cooper Company, San Francisco. Frank J. Mooney, secretary and treasurer, formerly handled in the East such accounts as Studebaker, Firestone, Oldsmobile and other national business.

Why Stop Advertising in Summer?

Most preachers take a vacation during July or August. As a result, thousands of churches are closed during those months.

Yet there are practically as many people in town as there were last December, and they need religion just as much.

If the churches in your town have been in the habit of closing their doors during the summer, why not sell them the idea of using paid space to carry the gospel to people who won't go out to church in hot weather? This may be a new idea to your churches, and new ideas do not appeal to every church, but if one congregation could lead the way in this new type of newspaper evangelism, it might do much for the community, and, incidentally, your advertising receipts.

Our Series No. 3, containing 52 ads, is designed for this use. The series can begin at any time. Examine these ads with this summer campaign in view. Proofs sent free by addressing Herbert H. Smith, 518 Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa. Charge for use $15 a year for smaller papers.

...g September 1, 1922, the services of ... Flagg were secured as Executive ...nager of the A. N. P. A., the chairman of the Open Shop Division, and the executive secretary, Mr. Flagg, agreed upon the following plan of organization:

"All members of the A. N. P. A. operating open or non-union shops were to be enrolled as members of the open shop division, and wherever possible were to pledge themselves to furnish one or more men at the call of the executive secretary of this division, to work in any office where there was trouble. An employer asking aid of the open shop division was to make the necessary provision to take care of the expenses incurred by the trouble in his office. Each member called upon to send men to the point of trouble would be expected to provide the men sent with railroad fare and other necessary traveling expenses, to be reimbursed through the open shop division from funds provided by the publisher calling for assistance. It was further agreed that when an emergency had passed, the offices from which the men had been drawn would take them back into their employ, the expense of their return to the office from which they came to be borne by the publisher who had called for assistance.

The open shop division was to keep accurate records of the various open shops and non-union offices, and of men available for employment in such offices, to the end that the members of this Association might have accurate information at all times as to the number of open shops actually operated, and as to the available labor supply for such offices.

Mr. Flagg's services began September 1, 1922. He has made several reports to the Board of Directors since that time. In his report of April 16, it is noted that there are 56 newspapers running open shops, of which 18 are non-union. Of these 56 open and non-union shops 53 are available for membership in this division, and 34 stand ready to aid the executive secretary in case of trouble that may arise in the office of any member of the A. N. P. A. The executive secretary has been unable to call upon the remaining 17 open shop publishers, but it is probable that most of them will join the open shop division.

The reports of Mr. Flagg indicate that during the brief period of its existence the open shop division has been of material benefit to a number of employers of union labor, enabling them to make advantageous contracts with the unions, and in some instances has undoubtedly prevented strikes. At least two employers operating open shops have been able to avoid what threatened to be serious trouble through the fact that the open shop division was ready to give prompt assistance.

It may interest members of the A. N. P. A. to know that in the 34 non-union and open shops referred to in this report there are approximately 500 typesetting machines, with about 850 non-union printers and 150 non-union pressmen and stereotypers. The other 17 offices that are expected to co-operate with this division employ about 450 non-union printers, stereotypers and pressmen, and operate about 100 typesetting machines.

In the opinion of the committee, the work thus far done by the open shop division justifies the action of the convention in creating such a division, and plainly indicates that this work should be continued by the Association.

Harry Chandler,
D. D. Moore, Chairman.

REPORT ON THE MACON PRINTING SCHOOL

THE Macon Printing School, established by S. N. P. A. in 1919, and afterwards accepted as the official school of the A. N. P. A., is now in its fourth year of successful operation.

It has forty (40) students, but has a capacity of seventy-five (75). There is still a vicious opposition to the school idea. The new student, planning to take the course is warned by craftsmen that the business is injurious to health; that the market is overcrowded with operators; that the machine cannot be mastered without a previous knowledge of printing; that the Union controls the printing offices of America, and that the Union will not admit a recruit who has not had five years of apprenticeship. All of these opposing arguments are used with telling effect, making it necessary for the school to answer hundreds of inquiries and send out expensive literature and advertising matter in great quantities before enrolling a single student. This constitutes our biggest problem at the present time, and it behooves our membership to give the fullest co-operation in combating the opposition. Liberal publicity and active assistance in getting the real truth before the prospective student are the weapons with which we must fight.

Checking the Work

The committee has carefully checked the work of the school during the past year to see if any students failed to learn enough during the course to make a sucessful start in the business. The former student was written a letter, asking what benefits he derived from the

ILLINOIS

The Key to the Mid-West Market

Illinois is a state of industry, agriculture and wealth.

This market outranks all other States in the combined value of manufactured products and value of all farm property.

Eighty-nine per cent of the land area of Illinois is in farms and over eighty-five per cent is improved farm lands.

The fertility of the soil has caused the State to rank, for many years, as one of the nation's leaders in value of agricultural properties and the gross annual receipts of its agricultural products.

As an industrial State it ranks third, having 18,594 factories of which the value of products exceeds $5,400,000,000 annually.

These Illinois daily newspapers cover the richest farming and industrial State in the Union.

course, what success he had in using his training, what suggestions he had to make for improving the course of study, etc. A letter was also addressed to each employer, asking for comments and suggestions. The school management welcomes and appreciates this effort to get real facts. The committee is thus put in position to see how wisely the Association's money is being spent, and how practical is the enterprise. If there are any troubles, we want to remedy them. If we are doing well we have comfort in knowing it.

THE EQUIPMENT

The Mergenthaler Linotype Company has loaned us 24 machines, 19 of which are in good working condition. All are old models, except one Model Fourteen, which was new when sent to the school two years ago.

The Intertype Company loaned us three practically new machines, one of them a recent model.

Thus we are in position to give the student a good working knowledge of the multiple magazine machines. He is taught to set all of the different kinds of composition used in a newspaper plant, and some of the publishers are really enthusiastic about the showing made by the new graduate. Two of the publishers of daily papers who have used the greatest number of them are Mr. J. L. Horne, Jr., of Rocky Mount, N. C., and also of Wilmington, N. C.; and the Hederman Brothers, of Jackson, Miss. Report orders for them have come from the Lynchburg Daily News, of Lynchburg, Va., and from the Intelligencer, of Lancaster, Pa.; Lansing, Mich.; Billings, Mont.; Fall River, Mass., and many others, thus showing that its service is national.

WAR WITH THE UNION

Reports indicate that the Union in some cities delights to crush the new operator if it is learned that he is from the school, and in several instances he was shut out from work and left in a bad financial plight. The publisher in such cases, having asked the student to come to work, is manifestly under an obligation which he should not shirk.

In several cities, however, the Union, having fallen down on its contract to provide men for their shop, welcomes the student and gives him a permit to work and as soon as he gets a little seasoning he is taken in as a full-fledged member.

Some amusing reports are received now and then from unions that hate the school and condemn it in every way. A student traveling incog, to avoid trouble, gets a card by keeping quiet about his connection with the school; and then writes to the school telling all he has heard.

AN IMPROVED SERVICE

During the past year a separate department for instructing in mechanics has been established. This has been of great assistance, and it insures the average student's ability to take good care of his machine, and save it from the injury of neglect.

WAR VETERANS

Nearly half of the students in the school are trainees of the United States War Veterans' Bureau. These are given ten months in which to complete a four months' course. Some of them have developed into unusually fine operators and machinists, but most of them feel that under the law they profit by failing to make good in their work. If they can stay in the school the allotted time and then make a failure of their first job they can get another training of some other kind, and thus perpetuate themselves almost indefinitely on Uncle Sam's payrolls. This great problem has worried the Veterans' Bureau and the school, and hurt the reputation of the school. Recently, however, a plan has been adopted through the co-operation of the Bureau and the school by which the veteran student will be rewarded for making good instead of being rewarded for making a failure.

THE COST OF THE SCHOOL

An inspection of the financial report in connection with the report on the graduates will show that only about one-third as much money has been spent to produce a graduate as has been used in similar undertakings by other printing associations. This comparison is not made to reflect on the other enterprises, but it is comforting for us to see that we have administered your funds so as to get the best possible results at the least possible cost.

Respectfully submitted,
W. T. ANDERSON.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT, MACON PRINTING SCHOOL

January 1 to April 15, 1923.

Below is given briefly the receipts and disbursements on school account since January 1, 1923. In explanation of this financial statement it may be of interest to say that the breakage on machines by students has been the main feature of distress in connection with the schools' operation. In addition to this item has been the cost of rehabilitation of the old and discarded machines loaned.

These two items have drained heavily upon the treasury. Your chairman thought it best to make a loan the latter part of last year in the sum of $2,500 for the purpose of buying new parts for the school machines which had been so generously loaned to us by the Mergenthaler and Intertype companies. It was believed at that time we could put the machines in good repair and then by a different arrangement with the school operator the repair bills could be reduced to a nominal or satisfactory sum.

Accordingly the loan was made, which explains the item in bills payable shown herewith. Then a contract was made with the school operator to the effect that your chairman was to pay him $100 per week as a subsidy, he to keep up repairs and pay all expenses of operation outside of insurance and the secretary's salary. This contract was made for a period of three months, to be revised at that time as experience may indicate to be proper and just.

So far this new arrangement has been much more satisfactory for all parties. Twenty-one machines are in thorough repair and are kept going steadily, with the minimum of breakage and stoppage.

At the last session of the A. N. P. A. an increase in dues was made to the extent of $1 per machine, for the purpose of establishing a school fund for training printers and operators. This it was estimated would yield about $5,500 per annum from the A. N. P. A., which sum was insufficient to take care of the school already established in Macon. Inasmuch as this was an enterprise of the S. N. P. A. originally, and was located in the South, the S. N. P. A. also raised its dues $1 per machine for school purposes, this adding probably $1,500 more to the school fund now available for the operation of the Macon school, which, under the circumstances, your chairman thinks will make it comfortable with the present plant and plan of operation. If anything can be saved out of the school moneys already provided, be assured it will be done and every effort made to leave something in the treasury to go toward establishing schools in other sections of the country.

Following is the financial report, the books having been audited by a certified accountant for the S. N. P. A. up to December 31, 1922:

REPORT OF A. N. P. A. COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FOREST RESOURCES

THE effort to bring about the formulation of an effective forestry policy by the United States Government, and its enactment into law is being carried on by your committee, working in conjunction with the American Forestry Association, of which your chairman is a member.

As you know, our efforts thus far have resulted in the introduction of the Snell Bill, H. R. No. 129, and the bill introduced in the Senate by Senator McCormick, of Illinois.

The report of last year dealt quite fully with the subject, and the details need not be repeated. The effort to take the Forestry Department out of the Department of Agriculture and place it in the Department of the Interior, has happily failed of accomplishment.

The work is going forward and we are hopeful that the coming session will result in substantial progress for this vitally important legislation.

The work done thus far has greatly aided in a broader understanding of the whole subject, and has made it plain that in the conservation of our timber supply, the proper harvesting in the timber crop, the right handling of the cut-over lands, and, where necessary reforestations, we are far behind European countries.

Your committee will continue its efforts to further the interests of the association in this great question, and will look to the membership for cordial co-operation.

REPORT OF A. N. P. A. PAPER COMMITTEE

DURING 1922 newsprint production exceeded 2,500,000 tons or approximately 140,000 tons more than during 1920, the highest previous year of production. Thus far this year new machines with a capacity in excess of 110,000 tons per annum have been put in operation and at various times during the year we may expect to see additional machines in operation with an equal or greater capacity, so that we may confidently expect to start 1924 with a capacity at least 230,000 tons over the beginning of this year.

There is, therefore, but little apprehension entertained of a shortage of supply during the latter part of the year or in the near future, and yet it must be noted that production, plus imports from Europe, less exports from the United States, exceeded consumption by not more than approximately 30,000 tons. This indicates great pressure on the market and accounts for the fact that spot paper has recently been selling around 4 cents, against the contract price of 3.75.

This condition is, of course, the direct result of excessive, if not wasteful consumption, a condition which publishers seem to have no present mind to correct and with all publications bulging with advertising we may expect this pressure to continue until at least other machines are in operation or imports from Europe are largely increased.

Under these conditions we may naturally turn our minds to both the immediate and distant future. As a starting point we find both publishers' stocks and mill stocks at a low point, the former at the end of February, 39 days' and the latter 3.4 days' maximum production, while both figures for safety should be very much higher, say 60 and 6 days', respectively. In the face of this condition we have two large consumption months ahead of us before we may expect the summer decline. During July, accumulations should begin so that there will be ample supplies in hand for September and October, for this is the point of danger that must be passed and it will be fully presented to you by our traffic committee. Briefly, this is, that traffic delays are anticipated during September and October and it, therefore, behooves all publishers not only for their own, but for the general good, to have ample stocks on hand to tide them over what may be a short period of delay in transportation.

We have no reason to believe, in [illegible] all of these conditions, principally bec[ause] the fact that there is so much future [in] in sight, that contract prices will be ad[hered] but confidently expect that it will remain [at] present figure for some time to come, [not] because of the period of plenty in [the] but because we have every reason to [be] that it is fully understood by both [the] and consumers that mill price fluctuati[ons] harmful to the entire industry.

1923 SPOT MARKET

During the first four months of the [present] year, 1923, there have been some qu[otations] and sales under 3.85 and over 4 ce[nts]. the majority of the tonnage has been [done] of at prices ranging between those two [points] and at the present time seems to be [quoted] firm at 4 cents, while the prices for [other] qualities of European newsprint have r[emained] firm during this period at 3.65 Atlan[tic] and 3.75 Gulf port.

1922 SPOT MARKET

At the time of the 1922 convention [the] newsprint was selling on the spot m[arket] 3.30 to 3.40 f. o. b. mill. During [May] price ranged around 3.50, although so[me] nage was offered at 3.45 and there we[re] sales for immediate shipment at 3.60. [With] the summer, due to the continued exces[s] of newsprint and the coal strike, the s[pot] ket price became 3.75 and this price [was] creased during August to 4 cents, whi[ch] was general throughout the last quarte[r] there was comparatively little spot pap[er] had, many of the mills reporting thei[r] entirely sold for the balance of the yea[r]. were sales during October, and offers [for] nage for November and December, at [3.]5 and one Middle West mill offered ton[nage] November, which was immediately ta[ken] 3.75 mill.

During May and throughout the [year] Scandinavian news was offered in fair[ly] ties at 3.50 dock Atlantic port, althou[gh] foreign tonnage was available at 3.30. [Two] thousand tons of Swedish, Norwegian a[nd] nish newsprint were offered for shipm[ent] ing the last three months of the year [to] Atlantic port, with a price of 3.75 Gulf [or] Atlantic port.

The major portion of the Swedish a[nd] wegian shipments to the United States [was] handled through the Newsprint Paper [Co.] tion, organized in July, 1922, by G. F. [Steele] formerly general manager of the Canad[ian] port Paper Company, Ltd.

Keep Your Business Young

Somebody, describing a business to you, uses the words, "enthusiasm"—"strength"—"aggressiveness"—"courage"—

And the picture you get from those words is probably a picture of youth—of a business which is kept young by the constant infusion of young blood. It may at the same time be a conservative business, it may have a long and enviable history; it may boast established connections that money could not buy. But those are not the virtues which make for continuing growth and success into the next generation, and the next—unless they are allied to the virtues of youth.

Happily, there is no reason why they should not be—because American business believes in youth and the spirit of youth, and thus American business has outstripped the world. And with this belief there is also belief in, and unparalleled use of, another force; the force of advertising.

For advertising can be the perpetual youth of business. Advertising, more than any other power within a business, can keep that business young, forward-looking, resourceful, eager for more and more growth. It is advertising that sets the keynote and the pace for business; it is advertising that keeps many a business growing—healthily and soundly, and to its very great profit.

For advertising is more than sales-making—more than reputation-building. Advertising reaches into every activity and every department of a business, working tirelessly, ceaselessly, effectively, with the strength and the enthusiasm and the courage of youth.

This organization delights to work with clients who work hard—after the manner of youth—and who keep their businesses young. A man cannot be young forever—but a business can! And if you make use of the strength and vision of youth, for the growth and health of your business, we would like very much to talk with you about making use, also, of the ever-young force of advertising—to exactly the same end.

These Fuller & Smith advertisements are frankly a solicitation of your advertising account. Perhaps with you our reputation for handling business is greater than our reputation for wanting business. If so, we would like this advertisement to place us before you as a real solicitor of your account, even though no representative of Fuller & Smith has recently called upon you.

tion, were on a basis of 3.50 for the first half of 1922.

The George H. Mead Company had originally announced a price of 3.75 for the first six months, but this was later reduced to 3.50; the Great Northern Paper Company made contracts on a basis of 3.75 for the year, but, effective March 1, price was reduced to 3.50. The International Paper Company made some contracts on which the price of 3.50 applied for the entire year, while others were adjustable quarterly.

Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., Belgo Paper Company, Ltd., and possibly others, by equalizing freight rates, sold paper to Southern publishers at prices reported to equal 3.25 to 3.37 mill.

Announcements of price for the third quarter were at 3.50, the George H. Mead, Canadian Export and Minnesota & Ontario Paper Companies fixing that price for the balance of the year. The International Paper Company charged 3.75 on tonnage in excess of contracts and on new business for the third quarter, and, effective September 1, the St. Regis and Hanna Paper Companies increased price for the balance of the third quarter to 3.75.

Prices for the fourth quarter were increased as fcllows:

International Paper Company, 3.75 on adjustable contracts and 4 cents on excess tonnage.

Great Northern Paper Company, 3.75—later reduced prices for this period to 3.62½.

St. Regis and Hanna Paper Companies, 4 cents.

St. Maurice Paper Company, Ltd., 3.75.

Minnesota & Ontario Paper Company, 3.75.

Northwest Paper Company, 3.75.

The contract price for the first six months of 1923 is 3.75. The Great Northern Paper Company has fixed that price for the entire year, and some other mills have made some contracts on the same basis.

The Wage Controversy

In April, 1922, a committee of newsprint manufacturers, whose wage agreement with the labor unions was to expire on May 1, demanded a ten per cent cut in wages of the skilled laborers, the reduction of wages of unskilled workers to the prevailing market rate for labor, and elimination of overtime for day workers. For a time it was believed a strike would result, but, fcllowing negotiations which were pending at the time of the 1922 convention and which lasted until late in May, the manufacturers involved in the dispute signed with their skilled and semi-skilled workers an agreement similar to that which expired on May 1 and no further trouble ensued.

During March, 1923, the skilled workers, comprising the Paper Makers' Union, of which J. T. Carey is president, voted to demand 10 per cent increase in wages, which would restore the rates in effect in 1920, the highest period.

The semi-skilled and unskilled workers composing the Pulp and Sulphite Workers' Union, of which J. P. Burke is president, voted to demand an increase of eight cents per hour, equivalent to an average of 20 per cent., restoring their wage scale to the 1921 level.

Since the 1920 wage peak, the skilled workers have had only one reduction in wages amounting to 10 per cent. The semi-skilled and unskilled have had two reductions since 1920, and now seek to regain one of those reductions.

Common labor in paper mills reached its maximum wage rate of 53 cents per hour in 1920. In 1921, after a strike in some mills, it was reduced to 40 cents and in January, 1922, after an arbitration, was again cut to 32 cents per hour, carrying with it a number of classified semi-skilled workers in proportionate reductions. Common labor is somewhat scarce and a number of the mills are now voluntarily paying above the 32-cent rate. The present wage agreements in union mills expire on May 1, next.

At the last national convention the labor unions voted to demand from the paper mills an increase in wages of 8 cents per hour for unskilled and semi-skilled classes and 10 per cent increase for skilled classes.

At a meeting held in New York last week seven manufacturers—St. Regis Paper Company, Hanna Paper Company, St. Maurice Paper Company, Abitibi Power & Paper Company, Spanish River Pulp & Paper Mills, Ontario Paper Company and the Minnesota & Ontario Paper Company—made a counter-proposition to increase wages 4 cents per hour for all classes, except common labor, which was placed at 39 cents per hour.

This proposition is the subject of a referendum vote of the employes in each of the mills concerned. The vote was taken Sunday, April 22.

Increased Newsprint Production

The following new machines came into production during 1922:

	Daily Capacity Tons	When Production Started
Water Paper Products Co., Chicago, Illinois..	30	April, 1922
International Paper Co., Three Rivers, Quebec..	240	First machine started in April, second and third during the summer, and fourth in September.

Following is a list of the new machine schedules for 1923, some of which have started production:

Canada		1923
Fort William Paper Co., Ltd., Fort William, Ont.	150	*January
St. Lawrence Paper Mills, Ltd., Three Rivers, Que.	75	*January
	75	*February
Belgo Paper Co., Ltd., Shawinigan Falls, Que..	85	*February

*In operation.

The following increased newsprint production is expected during 1924 and later years:

Donnacona Paper Company, Donnacona, Que., is doubling its newsprint output, that is, 100 tons per day additional.

Price Bros. & Co., Ltd., Kenogami, Que., 200 tons additional by January, 1924, and 200 tons additional at the beginning of each of the two succeeding years.

Great Lakes Paper Company, new mill at Port Arthur, Ont., with 125 tons per day beginning in spring of 1924.

Wigwam Pulp & Paper Company, Elko, B. C., first unit of new mill will produce 100 tons per day.

Fort Frances Pulp & Paper Company is planning an addition to its newsprint mill at Fort Frances, Ont., but no definite date has been set.

Newfoundland will have a new 400-ton mill if the plans of Premier Squires, as arranged in England, are ratified by the Newfoundland Legislature.

Assistance to Members.

Many members have taken advantage of the facilities offered by the New York office for securing news print for prompt shipment. Offerings of spot paper, published in our bulletins from week to week, brought many inquiries, and often resulted in the purchase of one or more cars at a favorable price. Frequently publishers, having secured one car to tide them over an emergency, have been so well satisfied with the quality of the paper and with the firm with which we put them in touch, that they have ordered additional paper from the same source. This has been particularly true with respect to European news print.

We have received many letters commending the association on the work done in assisting members who have been in immediate need of supplies which we secured for them.

We answered many inquiries from publishers who wished to become fully acquainted with market conditions before closing 1923 contracts; also many requests for information regarding financial responsibility, ability to deliver, etc., of dealers offering news print, particularly European, and reported on the quality of news print produced by the various American and European mills.

Lists of news print mills, with location and daily capacity, and lists of dealers handling news print were furnished to members. Our bulletin showing roll widths of daily newspapers and contract information has been of assistance to publishers who wanted to locate newspapers in their vicinity using the same roll widths, and has been of inestimable value to news print manufacturers and dealers who, when they have a quantity of a certain size, are enabled through the aid of this bulletin, to offer it direct to publishers who are most likely to be interested, thus benefiting both publishers and manufacturer.

Bulletins.

We have published throughout the year the "B Special"" newsprint bulletin through which members have been kept informed regarding the contract and spot market, and in which by the use of charts and tables, we have covered production, consumption, publishers' and mill stocks and imports and exports of news print paper and advertising volume. During July and subsequent months the attention of members has been drawn to the necessity for conservation of news print.

The various steps and the results of the wage controversy of the labor unions in the paper mills have been fully reported.

A special bulletin showing widths of rolls, source of news print supply, date of expiration of contract and tonnage of upwards of 1,100 newspapers of the United States and Canada, has been compiled and mailed to all newspapers included in the list.

Tariff.

The committee having in charge tariff matters affecting news print and pulp will report the successful outcome of its efforts.

Conservation.

The News Print Conservation Committee will report the steps taken in an effort to reduce the excessive consumption of news print.

REPORT OF THE NEWSPRINT CONSERVATION COMMITTEE

THE committee on Newsprint Conservation was brought into being several years ago during an emergency period. It has functioned infrequently since that time, and only when the paper situation was acute and serious enough to compel real action.

Your committee during the late summer of last year, anticipating the possibility of a crisis because of the great increase in consumption organized sub-committees in practically every State in the Union, each under the chairmanship of a progressive self-sacrificing member.

Although there was a distinct hardening of the paper market during the early part of last Fall, the anticipated crisis did not occur, and sufficient tonnage became available to meet all needs.

During the latter part of 1922 a questionnaire was mailed to members in an effort to ascertain how much more news print would be consumed during 1923 than had been used during 1922, and what would be the excess production over estimated consumption. Four hundred and eighty-seven members responded to this request and reported a consumption during 1922 of 1,798,000 tons. Their contracts for 1923 a the estimates of tonnage to be required in exc of contract indicated a consumption for t year of over 2,012,000 tons. This indica an increased consumption during this year 12 per cent over 1922 consumption, or an crease among 487 members who reported 75 cent of the total consumption in the Uni States and Canada, of approximately 214,(tons.

Both your committee and its many sub-c mittees, while inactive during the past f months, are militant, on the watch, and sta ready at any time, when conditions may indic such a course, to bring every argument to b to curb the mad rush of news print consur tion should it threaten to lead to dema which the mills even with their largely increa capacity, would be unable to meet.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON TRAFFIC

YOUR committee on Traffic has endeavo during the past year to render mate service to members in connection with tra portation of newspapers and news print.

In out-of-town circulations there has bee decided shift from express to baggage, and gradual extension by railroads of baggage s vice. There are various baggage rates, eitl of long standing or for local areas, which sho not be increased. Your committee considers t all transportation rates are at high levels, a that future tendency should be downwa Therefore, we oppose attempts for upw equalization. We are maintaining this view pending cases affecting rates generally.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is m ing an investigation into express transporta generally. Applications have been made for creases and decreases in various rates. American Railway Express Company, at the ginning of the inquiry, notified your asso tion that it would not seek any change in existing rate on newspaper bundles. This r was established two years ago as a comprom agreement with representatives of a number large newspapers. Some members have pressed opinion that we should seek reducti

When we set the installation and upkeep cost of The Multi-Mailer System at 65c a day, we give you the outside figure.

Many publishers find that this 65c is more than offset by the money saved through eliminating the time of a linotype operator and a Galley Room employee.

The fact that The Multi-Mailer System usually pays for itself is of minor importance compared to the way in which it builds subscriber satisfaction by giving subscribers the mail delivery service they expected when they subscribed.

THE SPEEDAUMATIC COMPANY
817-825 Washington Blvd. :-: Chicago

HERE'S an adaptation of The Multi-Mailer System ideally suited for mail lists with as few as 1,000 names. The operations are simple. Speedaumats are embossed on a Speedembosser with subscriber's name, address, expiration date, and serial number. Speedaumats correspond to linotype slugs.

SPEEDAUMAT

SPEEDEMBOSSER

THEY are embossed and altered by a Circulation Department employee on a Speedembosser which is kept in the Circulation Department. Card proofs for the Expiration File are made on a Speedaustamp of all Speedaumats made or changed. The Speedaumats are then filed in a cabinet kept in the Circulation Department, so that the mail list is always accessible for additions and changes.

AT mailing time, the Speedaumats are fed into a Speedaudresser by which publications can be addressed direct at the rate of 2,000 to 3,500 an hour, depending on the skill of the operator. This machine has an attachment for printing strip or office check sheets.

SPEEDAUDRESSER

These mechanical elements, when woven together by the UNIT PLAN OF OPERATION, provide a method of handling the mail list which prevents preventable errors, does away with duplicated labor, and makes subscriber complaints regarding delays and non-deliveries few and far between. A complete explanation of the UNIT PLAN will be sent with a copy of the catalogue.

of the express rate. Your committee, under advice of your directors, have considered it advisable to await opportunity for consideration later when not involved with other commodities and rates.

In news print transportation, your committee has endeavored to render service through four principal channels:

1. Watchfulness over freight rates.
2. Relieving cases of news print shortage caused by traffic delays.
3. Offers of co-operation with paper mills in car shortages.
4. Preventing troubles by advance precautions in co-operation with government agencies and railroad officials who have cordially recognized the necessities of news print transportation.

Through weekly bulletins during the past year the association has requested publishers to notify the manager's office of delays on news print transportation. All such cases were acted upon promptly in co-operation with the railroads and the threatened distress relieved. Requests from mills for help in car supply also received immediate attention. The value of this service to publishers during the year probably was greater than in former years, and your committee commends it to the association in case of future necessity.

If forecasts are correct, serious congestion of railway traffic is anticipated in the early autumn. Officials of the American Railway Association have advised us that their projected chart lines indicate an unprecedented volume of business to be moved with high peaks in September and October. Blockades, embargoes, car shortages and other delays are probable, all affecting news print shipments.

The railway executives, we are assured, have a full realization of the necessity for full car supply and prompt service for news print, but publishers should be prepared to tide over temporary interrutions during the autumn congestion.

Your Committee on Traffic takes this opportunity of expressing its thanks and appreciation to L. B. Palmer, manager of your association, whose energetic efforts have translated into direct action the committees' advisory functioning and supplied to members an agency of real value.

J. P. Considine,
S. M. Williams, Chairman.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON FEDERAL LAWS

THE activities of your committee on Federal Laws for the past year have been devoted to the tariff provisions of the Revenue Act adopted last summer; the Treasury Departments' interpretation of the definition of "Standard news print," under the provisions of the Tariff Act, and of the Anti-Dumping Law.

News Print Tariff.

At the time of the 1922 convention, the Revenue Act had been reported out of the House of Representatives with news print, and both chemical and ground pulp on the free list. In May the Senate Finace Committee reached the news print schedule, and in the hearings before that committee there developed for the first time the active opposition of the International Paper Company to this schedule of the Tariff Act. Two hearings were held by the committee, and the free list as finally reported out retained the news print schedule. Later, in June, an active lobby of paper and sulphite manufacturers endeavored to have the Senate Finance Committee report out a 10 per cent duty on sulphite. Your committee prepared a brief, and appeared before the finance committee in the hearings on this schedule. At this hearing it developed that a vigorous fight to take sulphite pulp off the free list could be expected. The committee felt that the duty on sulphite would unquestionably result in higher news print prices, and at the suggestion of L. B. Palmer, State sub-committees of the Committee on Federal Laws were formed, with three members in each State. Through the co-operation of these committees, Mr. Palmer and Elisha Hanson, your committee's Washington representative, this fight was won, and sulphite pulp retained on the free list.

Late in July, after several hours debate on the paper and wood pulp schedules, the Senate voted to retain both chemical pulp and news print on the free list.

Tariff Definition of "Standard News Print" Paper."

On October 30, 1922, the Collector of Customs at New York transmitted to the Treasury Department a report containing a narrow definition of news print paper. The effect of this definition would have been to exclude from importation, free of duty, all news print paper except 32-lb., white, machine finished paper, containing approximately 75 per cent ground wood and 25 per cent sulphite.

Your committee submitted to the Treasury Department a brief, maintaining that standard news print paper could be defined only in general terms as: "newsprint used in the manufacture of standard newspapers." A copy of this brief was sent to the Collector of the Port of New York, and the matter is still before the Treasury Department for final action. Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Moss recently accorded your committee a full and complete hearing on the subject, and it is hoped that his views towards the definition submitted by the committee will be favorable.

Anti-Dumping Act.

In the summer and fall of 1922 the collector at one of the American points of entry, held up shipments of Canadian news print consigned to an American publisher, on the theory that the American price was lower than the Canadian price, and that the shipment violated the Anti-Dumping Act. Through the efforts of your committee's Washington representative, a ruling was finally secured releasing this shipment, and the shipments of the Canadian consignor at prices somewhat under the American market were found not to violate the Anti-Dumping Act.

In its activities in connection with the tariff and with the news print definition, your committee's efforts to date could not have been satisfactorily concluded without the invaluable assistance of L. B. Palmer, manager of the association, both in New York and in Washington, and the active and skillful assistance of Mr. Elisha Hanson in Washington.

Respectfully submitted,

S. E. Thomason, Chairman.

REPORT OF A. N. P. A. COMMITTEE ON SECOND CLASS POSTAGE

THE Committee on Second Class Postage regrets that it cannot report greater progress in the year which has elapsed since May 1, 1922.

Pursuant to the authority extended at the last annual convention of the A. N. P. A., your committee's efforts with Congress were made jointly with the American Publishers' Conference, through whose membership were joined the efforts of the newspapers, magazines, the trade papers and farm periodicals. Without criticizing the manner in which the publishers' point of view was presented in Washington, your committee has been convinced by the experience of the past year that the best results can be achieved through independent action of a committee of our association.

Your chairman has visited Washington three times during the past year in the interests of the Kelly Bill, which provided for a joint revision downward of the existing zone rates, and has attended two conferences in New York of the American Publishers' Conference.

We were confronted last May with the legislative situation presented by a Congress holding night and day sessions in order to clean up the revenue bills, and adopt shipping board and other legislation deemed of the first importance. This was not conducive to careful consideration of the measure we sought to have adopted. The general attitude in Washington was that every added piece of legislation was an added irritation to the perplexed and perspiring Solons.

In the discussions of the American Publishers' Conference, your committee urged that the entire postal program should be deferred until Congress be convened in the fall, but the majority of those represented in the American Publishers' Conference were of the opinion that the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads could be persuaded to report out out the Kelly Bill. Postmaster Work reported to the Hon. Halvor Steenerson, chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, on June 22, indicating that the Kelly Bill had his support, and on June 27 the matter was brought up in committee. At this session, optimistic forecasts as to the probable action of the committee proved unfounded, and the committee decided to postpone action until December 1, because it was expected that by that date the Joint Postal Commission would have a report ready for submission.

The American Publishers' Conference kept careful track of the situation in the House Postal Committee during the summer of 1922, and on December 12, the Kelly Bill was brought to a vote in the Postal Committee, and by a vote of ten to five, was laid on the table.

At this same meeting, although the Joint Postal Commission had made no report, the Post Office Committee went on record as recommending an appropriation for the continuance of the work of this commission.

There can be no doubt that the provisions of the Kelly Bill offered a just and equitable revision of second class rates, preserving in every detail the features of the present zone laws. The political considerations which brought about the defeat of this bill in the Post Office Committee are beyond the understanding of your committee.

It is notable, however, that five members of the present House Post Office Committee were not re-elected, and it is believed that a judicious educational program and a proper presentation of the arguments in favor of the Kelly Bill before the new Post Office Committee, through the efforts of our association's Washington representative, may yet bring about a more favorable consideration of the Association's postal program.

Respectfully submitted,

S. E. Thomason, Chairman.

REPORT OF A. N. P. A. COMMITTEE ON ADVERTISING AGENTS

IN a preface to its report last year, the Committee on Advertising Agents endeavored to enlighten the membership as to its purpose and how it functioned. To restate it briefly, the committee looks upon itself simply as a clearing house to determine whether or not an applicant for recognition is a bona fide agency placing advertising nationally, and if its financial condition is such as would warrant the issuing of a credit rating. Prior to last year, recognition was not granted to applicants who could not show a net worth of at least $3,000, and last year we recommended to the convention that the minimum surplus requirement should be advanced to $5,000, and on that basis your committee has accepted or rejected applications for recognition during the past year.

The committee has reclassified credit ratings on its list, increasing the standing of those entitled to it and lowering the credit ratings of agencies whose condition, financially or otherwise, warranted it.

The committee begs to call your attention to certain practices used by advertising agencies that are not only unethical but destructive, such as: The agency press agent; the borrowing of substantial sums of money from an agency by its principals; failure to maintain an adequate surplus; slow payment of obligations; splitting of commissions, and new-fangled schemes.

The Agency Press Agent.

The onslaught on our news columns by the old time press agent simply required the discriminating eye of a trained editor to dump his offerings into the waste paper basket, but now the publisher is confronted with a real problem.

A number of the leading advertising agencies in the country regularly employ paid press agents to prepare publicity matter for the benefit of their clients, which is sent to publishers, either accompanied with an advertising contract or an implied promise of one. Shall this be cast aside with the possible loss of future contracts from the agency sending it out, especially if your competitor publishes it? This practice is clearly an invasion of editorial functon and an imposition on the editorial department.

One large agency boasts of the development of its publicity department from one man to a dozen, and you would be astounded at the audacity shown in the solicitation of accounts by these agencies. The newspapers of this country are losing thousands of dollars yearly through the pernicious working of these free space "bandits." The elaborate preparations made in creating "news color" for the purpose of personal publicity, the connecting up of prospects with news incidents, all properly staged, even to the motion picture camera man; in other words, publicity, properly inspired, will accomplish results, and if any good is to be accomplished in "scotching" this onslaught, every member must play his part and be ever on the alert.

Borrowing Funds by Proprietors.

In investigating the financial condition of advertising agencies, your committee frequently discovers instances where principals or proprietors borrow money from their agency funds on I. O. U.'s or personal notes to an extend that is unsafe, and in many cases where this is done the agency has shown corresponding amounts in bank borrowings in their liability column. Your committee refuses to credit such notes as assets in figuring net surplus and seek to have such condition remedied as quickly as possible.

Occasionally we receive financial statements that are either evasive or fail to supply the accurate information necessary for the protection of credit. In such cases, when we believe the accounts of our members may be in jeopardy, we suggest that we be authorized to draw on the funds of the association in the sum of not in excess of $1,000 per annum, for the purpose of defraying the cost of making audits in such cases.

Failure to Maintain an Adequate Surplus.

As a protection to the members, the committee insists that agencies should maintain at all times an adequate surplus. Credit ratings are based for the main part on this particular item.

Demands for Co-operation

The subject of the increasing demands of the advertising agencies for excessive co-operation was discussed at the last meeting, and the Committee on Advertising Agents was instructed to present to this convention a standard of practice with regard to co-operation.

"Co-operation, how many sins are committed in thy name."

With some of the leading newspapers of the country maintaining elaborate service and merchandising departments; with newspaper publishers having no competition and supreme in their field denouncing the very thought of co-operation, and with the newspapers in highly competitive fields outdoing themselves in furnishing this or that service for national advertisers, the problem of your committee is not an easy one to solve. "What co-operation a publisher may profitably extend for an adequate advertising schedule" might be the subject for further discussion at this convention.

Meanwhile, your committee believes that while members should assist in every legitimate manner to bring the greatest success to advertising campaigns, it nevertheless recommends that the standard of newspaper merchandising practice for newspapers be confined to service that is clearly within the province of newspapers to render and enumerates them as follows:

First: To be able to furnish a survey of local market and trade territory.

Second: To encourage and make possible adequate distribution by supplying route lists of retailers for the use of salesmen of the manufacturer or advertiser who has made an adequate contract for space.

Third: If letters to retailers or broadsides so called, are to be mailed, bills for printing and postage should be paid by the advertiser.

Fourth: To decline to sell goods, trim windows or make check-ups on sales or distribution.

Splitting Commissions.

In the matter of splitting commission, your committee calls attention to the resolution opposing this practice, which was adopted at the last annual meeting.

Slow Pay.

The question of slow pay is one that every member should watch carefully, and the New York office should be advised by members of any serious delinquencies. Credit ratings are determined from a national basis only, and an agency placing considerable local business may discount his bills, while passing discounts dates with publishers at a distance. Your committee feels justified in recommending the cancellation of recognition, by this association, of all agencies that are habitually slow pay or compass many cash discounts.

Work of Committee During the Year.

One hundred and ten (110) applications for recognition were received. Thirty-seven (37) agencies were granted recognition; applications of twenty-nine (29) were refused; recognition previously extended to thirteen (13) agencies was cancelled; ratings of six (6) agencies were changed, and recognition transferred on requests for thirteen (13) agencies.

BUYING FEATURES HERE AND THERE IS ELIMINATED WHEN A NEWSPAPER BECOMES AN NEA FULL SERVICE CLIENT

NEA FULL SERVICE CLIENTS RECEIVE DAILY:—Live, up-to-the-minute news pictures; News feature stories; Reviews of new motion picture productions and intimate bits about movie players; Live news art to use with stories carried by the wires; Radio features; Every feature necessary for a complete woman's page; Children's features; A complete page of editorial page features; A sport page conducted by Billy Evans, American League Umpire, and real laugh producing comics, enough for a full page. FICTION BY THE WORLD'S GREATEST AUTHORS ALSO IS A PART OF NEA SERVICE.

READ WHAT CLIENTS WRITE US

Really and truly, your service is marvellous. Indeed, perhaps many clients cannot thoroughly appreciate it as we do here, for at this time with full leased wire service just installed, just beginning a farm section, etc., and playing for much increased circulation, words fail to express our appreciation of the value of your entire service, not forgetting the splendid features such as "Charm," and which are making a distinct hit in this city and wherever we circulate.

The Wausau Daily Record-Herald,
Wausau, Wisconsin.

We wish to congratulate you on the completeness, timeliness, and general artistic get-up of your full service. Considering the small size of our paper, we are using a much larger percentage of this service than we ever thought we would when we started it. We have found it to be a great circulation getter and holder.

The Evening Republican,
Columbus, Indiana.

Enclosed is full page from today's Beacon on the "Mother Valentine" contest. We are rather proud of the idea of printing an entire page of poems. It has been years since the Beacon conducted a contest that proved as popular as this one, and here's a kind word and many thanks to NEA for the idea.

Wichita, Kans.

I want to congratulate you on the high class of special features you are sending us. The Vincent Richards Tennis articles and "Hoppe's Little Billiard Tricks" are both excellent in their line and the advance announcements of the Talmadge feature and "The Tangle" indicates that they will be valuable additions to our Woman's Page.

Examiner-New Era,
Lancaster, Pa.

I want to let you know how much pleased we are with your service. It is excellent, and we are constantly using more of it.

The Springfield Union,
Springfield, Mass.

Let me compliment you on the increasing excellence of the feature matter, etc., that NEA is putting out. It would seem to me that it is an extraordinary privilege to be a member of NEA and you may be sure that we take advantage of all publicity to strengthen ourselves with our readers and secure new ones.

The Warren Chronicle,
Warren, Ohio.

I do not believe that at any time in recent years has NEA Service been as satisfactory as it has been lately. There has been variety, novelty and interest in the service, with a number of features which, judging by the comments of the staff and readers, are taking well. The Norma Talmadge Manners series is an excellent woman's page feature.

The new woman's serial, "The Tangle," gives promise of filling the void which was left when the famous "Confessions of a Wife" ended.

Birmingham Post,
Birmingham, Ala.

We are enclosing the first page of The Daily News of Tuesday, Dec. 26, showing the first pictures carried in this vicinity, on the Mer Rouge tragedy. This was the very first lay-out of this kind, shown in a Dayton paper, and naturally, we are grateful to NEA for its enterprise in getting this out to us right on the jump.

The Dayton News,
Dayton, Ohio.

The service is as near perfect as possible.

INCREASE IN NEWSPRINT USE FORCING HIGHER CONTRACT PRICES

Federal Trade Commission's Report Shows Production in March Ran Ahead of Past Five Years—P. T. Dodge Predicts $80 Contract Price Very Soon

INFORMATION that more newsprint paper was produced and consumed in the United States in the month of March, 1923, than in any March for the past five years and that prices are bound to go up soon was given the paper trade this week. The production and consumption figures were furnished by the Federal Trade Commission and the price announcement by Philip T. Dodge, of the International Paper Company.

The tendency of newsprint prices is upward, according to the opinion expressed Tuesday by Mr. Dodge.

"I do not see how newsprint prices can help but be higher," said Mr. Dodge, "in view of the generally increased wages, higher raw material prices and higher transportation costs." Newsprint is now selling for $75 a ton on contract and $80 a ton for spot delivery. Mr. Dodge expects that the $80 price will represent the market for contract deliveries shortly.

Commenting upon the operations of the International Paper Company, Mr. Dodge said that at present they are entirely satisfactory. After two years of unprofitable operations the company had now reached a point where it was earning its fixed charges, its preferred dividends, and had reported a balance for the common.

Capacity operations are being carried on at virtually all of the company's plants. The Three Rivers plant at Quebec, which was originally designed to produce 240 tons of paper daily, is now producing 300 tons. This is credited with being the lowest cost producing plant in the world.

The Federal Trade Commission's newsprint paper review for March, 1923, shows the actual production for the month amounted to 117,075 tons of standard news, which was 7 per cent above the average for the previous five-year period. Production for March, 1923, against March, 1922, shows an increase of 6 per cent. for standard news.

The average production for the years 1918 to 1922 inclusive, amounted to 109,512 tons for a period corresponding to March.

The imports of newsprint for December, 1922, were 18,831 tons more than for December, 1921. The exports of newsprint for December, 1922, were 450 tons more than for December, 1921.

The imports and exports of printing paper not dutiable (practically all newsprint) and of wood pulp for the month of December, 1922, compared with the month of December, 1921, as shown by the records of the Department of Commerce, were as follows:

	December, 1922 Net tons	December, 1921 Net tons
Imports of news print (total)	98,494	79,663
From Canada	80,642	62,945
Germany	3,471	2,246
Sweden	6,905	9,635
Finland	3,606	2,166
Norway	2,669	2,430
Other countries	1,201	241
Exports of news print (total)	2,059	1,599
To Peru	13	98
Mexico	35	24
Cuba	1,122	954
Columbia	132	30
Philippine Islands	380	148
Japan	9	49
Other countries	368	296
Imports of ground wood pulp (total)	30,447	28,498
Imports of chemical wood pulp (total)	154,347	117,059
Unbleached sulphite	77,166	57,723
Bleached sulphite	28,306	17,825
Unbleached sulphate	45,236	40,049
Bleached sulphate	3,639	1,462
Paper stock other than wood pulp	26,914	19,860
Exports of domestic wood pulp	1,855	2,617
Exports of rags and other material made from vegetable fibre	3,497	2,448

The tonnage to "other countries" under "Exports of Newsprint" for December, 1922, includes 123 tons to Canada, 71 tons to Central America, 88 tons to Venezuela, 30 tons to Australia, and 17 tons to Salvador.

Stocks of rolls in the hands of jobbers at the end of March, were 36 tons more than the stocks in the hands of the same jobbers at the beginning of the month. Stocks of sheets were 107 tons more at the end of March than at the beginning of the month. The net increase in the total stocks of newsprint in the hands of jobbers at the end of March, amounted to 143 tons. Commitments to sell roll news were 3,500 tons greater than commitments to buy. Commitments to sell sheet news were 1,183 tons less than commitments to buy. Total commitments to sell both rolls and sheets were 2,317 tons greater than commitments to buy.

Publishers' stock increased 2,239 tons during the month. Average daily tonnage used during March was 229 tons more than the average used during February.

Publishers' stocks and transit tonnage on March 31 represented 36 days supply at the existing rate of consumption.

Publishers' and Jobbers' total stocks and tonnage in transit on March 31 aggregated 225,540 tons.

The domestic consumption of standard news by metropolitan dailies using between one-half and three-fourths of a million tons annually for March, 1923, when compared with March, 1922, shows an increase of 19 per cent and an increase of 33 per cent when compared with February, 1921.

The above metropolitan dailies held about 61 per cent of the tonnage on hand at the end of the month.

The weighted average price on contract deliveries from domestic mills to publishers during March, 1923, f. o. b. mill, in carload lots, for standard news in rolls was $3.770 per 100 pounds. This weighted average is based upon March deliveries of about 85,000 tons on contracts involving a total tonnage of approximately 773,000 tons of undelivered paper manufactured in the United States.

The weighted average contract price based on deliveries from Canadian Mills of about 38,000 tons of standard roll news in carload lots, f. o. b. mill in March, 1923, was $3,748 per 100 pounds. This weighted average is based upon the March deliveries on contracts involving about 296,000 tons of undelivered Canadian paper.

The weighted average market price for March, 1923, of standard roll news in carload lots f. o. b. mill, based upon domestic purchases totaling about 17,000 tons was $3.840 per 100 pounds.

Editors to Atlantic City

The Pennsylvania Editorial Association, composed of newspaper men representing several hundred dailies and weeklies in the Keystone State, will hold its annual convention at Atlantic City, June 15 to 18. The visiting newspaper men will be the guests of the Atlantic City Hotelmen's Association, city officials and resort newspaper men at a banquet, clambake and yachting cruise. John G. Zook, of the Lititz (Pa.) Express, is president of the editorial association, while M. S. Schock, of the Selinsgrove (Pa.) Times, is secretary.

Big Rapids Publisher Dies

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

YPSILANTI, Mich., April 25.—William P. Nesbitt, aged 76, Postmaster of Big Rapids, and prominent in the publishing history of that city, is dead. Born in London, he came to America at 14, enlisted in the Union Army at 18. In 1870 he founded the Pontiac (Mich.) Bill Poster. He purchased the Big Rapids Herald in 1882, and also published the Evening Bulletin.

Official State Paper Opposed

The Association of the Bar of New York City has sent a resolution to the New York state legislature approving the bill of Senator William T. Byrne of Albany to repeal the law establishing an official state paper at Albany, under which the Albany Evening Journal, published by William Barnes, was designated.

The following figures show the Federal Trade Commission's tabulation on newsprint stocks, production and shipments for March, 1918, to 1923:

		Stocks on hand 1st of period. Net tons	Production. Net tons	Shipments. Net tons	Stocks on hand end of period. Net tons

100% A. B. C.

ONLY a very few of the newspaper publishers still prefer to retain their isolated position with reference to the A.B.C.

Out of a 21,338,027 total daily circulation of papers above the 25,000 mark in the United States and Canada, A. B. C. papers have 20,232,269—a percentage of 94.81

Daily additions to membership list indicate that it should not be long before we can write 100% to cover all the leading newspapers.

The timeliness of the establishment and careful development of the A. B. C. is reflected today in the clarified relations prevailing between publishers and advertisers.

To the many publishers of the North American Continent who have joined heartily in carrying out A. B. C. principles there belongs a great share of the credit for the Bureau's success.

There are over 1800 members who would welcome into fellowship the few who are not yet enrolled as "Members of the A.B.C."

PRESS CALLED THE TONGUE OF THE WORLD

"The President, within the last few days, has made a notable contribution to this method of discussing international questions. He has presented to us calmly and temperately and vividly the importance of adjudicating international disputes of a legal character, through the instrumentality of a court specially fitted to adjudicate them.

"It is fortunate that the thing can be discussed by you and such as you, up and down the breadth and length of the country, until finally the verdict will be rendered. It will be a verdict which will be rendered under the charge of a court, of which you newspaper men are, in many instances, the presiding justices.

"The verdict may be favorable or unfavorable. If it is unfavorable, that is the end of the matter; if it is favorable—if adjudication of international controversies of a legal sort can well be committed to a court specially fitted to adjudicate, then it is time enough to consider the mechanical difficulties in the way, because in the end if one which you wholeheartedly approve, and if you have set your will to attain that end, our intelligences may be trusted to find means whereby it may be wisely compassed.

"Alongside of the problem of adjudication, of disputes of a justiciable sort, is the problem of the adjustment of the disputes that are not justiciable.

"Is it your desire that America should make a notable contribution to the process of peaceful adjustment? If so, hark back to the fact that we were potent in influence in creating the Hague Tribunal. If it is the will of the American people that we shall make a contribution to the orderly adjustment of disputes that are non-legal, even as it may be your will that we shall adjudicate the disputes of a legal sort, then it will be time enough to discuss the adaptability of the machinery that exists for that end.

"Adjudication and adjustment—two great international processes, for one a court needed, for the other a standing tribunal of arbitration. But both these processes are processes which are available only when the minds of disputing nations have been led away from the determination to fight, and have been moved to substitute peaceful settlement for the arbitrament of war.

The process by which the minds of disputing nations are brought together on the proposition of substituting peace for war is the process that we call 'mediation.' "

"Is it to be the desire of the American people that America shall or shall not make a notable contribution to the process of international mediation?

"I am not discussing the League of Nations. That is a mere question of machinery. The League of Nations is a machine, the nature and function of which gives rise to bitter controversy and sharp differences of opinion between groups of equally intelligent people. Our distinguished and beloved guest, Lord Robert Cecil, sees the League as an organization of one sort. Responsible American public men see the League as an organization of another sort.

"Lord Robert, if I sense him rightly, lays little stress upon the letter of the covenant. The English have a genius for taking almost any kind of a governmental formula and evolving from it something that is great and good. But we with our training in the construction of written constitutions can't be criticised if we insist upon taking things with a certain literalism.

"But I am not discussing now in such a company as this the merits of the League controversy; I am pointing out to you that the question of machinery, and it is subordinate, as questions of form always subordinate to questions of substance, to the great fundamental, and that is: is it or is it not the will of America as formed and stimulated by you that America shall make a notable contribution toward the processes of international and peaceful mediation?

"Adjudication, adjustment, mediation which precedes them both—those are the things upon which to focus in the days that lie ahead, and I make something like an appeal to you of the great profession of journalism—as your collective tongues discuss this question in the days ahead, that you shall dissociate particular solutions of these problems from the individuals who happen to propose them, and deal with the question on its merits, irrespective of your prejudices for or against the source from which the proposal comes, because it is after a verdict upon which America has deliberated after being adequately charged, that the hope of this nation and perhaps of the world depends, because we are at a critical moment in the wordl's history. A momentous decision at any moment may affect the whole subsequent course of events.

"So far as America is concerned, that decision will be valuable in proportion to the amount of intelligent thought that has preceded it, and in a larger measure yours is the responsibility for seeing to it that that thought is evoked not in the spirit that kindles controversy and partisanship, but out of the patriotic heart which seeks to stimulate thinking and make each person a factor in shaping the course of America.

"If we want to mediate, and the League isn't the right instrumentality, let the League transform itself, and if it can't be transformed, let's find another instrumentality, but the question of substance stands out.

"If we want to adjudicate, and the Permanent Court of International Justice is not the ideal tribunal, let's make our constructive proposal for bettering it. If we want to adjust and the Hague Tribunal needs to be made more effective, then let's put American initiative and American resourcefulness at work and see whether we can give the added strength.

"The questions are—mediation, adjudication, adjustment. The moment is critical. Everything depends upon the spirit in which we approach the decision of what our verdict shall be. Yours, my friends, is the trusteeship of unbounded opportunity and unlimited influence. God grant that in the days ahead you will use that influence and that opportunity in such fashion that the collective tongue of the press of America shall speak things that are accordant to America's devotion to justice and to peace as well as her devotion to liberty and independence."

James W. Gerard, formerly Ambassador to Germany, said:

"If we wanted to do something really serious for Europe, if we really wanted to show our good-will, we couldn't do it better than by cutting to one per cent for ten years, the debt which Great Britain is so bravely trying to pay us. That would do more to show our good-will than barrels of idealistic speeches, and it would bind the two nations together for many peaceful years.

"There are two things that are delaying the campaign for the League of Nations. The first is the absence from the lists of our stricken champion, Woodrow Wilson. (Applause) The second is the wars and jealousies of Europe and the Near East, which perpetuate the age-long hatreds and the present-day revenges, and make many Americans think that it is better to leave Europe to stew in its own witches' broth of hate.

"We have seen since the League was established, the nation of the Armenians betrayed by the Allies. Great Britain only half-heartedly backing the Greek invasion of Turkey, designed to enforce the Treaty of Severis, and France and Italy furnishing the Turks arms and ammunition to fight that invasion.

"Frank Bouillon, the envoy of France who concluded the Treaty of Angora, in making a speech in that city, said to the Turks: 'Never in the darkest days of the war did France cease to be the friend of Turkey.'

"We have seen Silesia torn from Germany and added to Poland. We might just as well take counties of Pennsylvania where Polish miners have gone to work and are in the majority and say that those counties should be part of Poland because Poles are there in the majority. That Silesian question has raised an Alsace-Lorraine in Germany, which will lead some day to war of revenge.

"I am not going to talk of the League of Nations. I have only spoken of these specific injustices because your guest, Lord Robert Cecil, who has had so much to do with the creation of the League of Nations, has been against every one of these injustices.

"We have got problems in our own country. You gentlemen of the press would feel, first of all, before any class, any dislocation of our complicated social system. Your advertising—your life-blood— would first of all disappear. But you possess and wield the great power of publicity—the sun and air cure for political ills and corruption.

"On the continent of Europe there are newspapers that can be bought for politics, blackmail or revenge, but here in this country the newspapers are more independent. You don't even garble the news in your columns to suit the opinion of a proprietor, but those opinions are frankly stated on the editorial page.

"Mr. Wiley told you that in the last convention the farmer States of Montana and South Dakota had voted for me. I am proud of a vote from those farmers who sit up reading and thinking in the long, dark northern winter nights and I tell you, gentlemen, that there is bitter unrest today among the farmers of this country, the backbone of our land.

"A friend of mine told me the other day that to complete a quick job here in New York he had paid plasterers for twelve hours' work $40 a day. No one quarrels with high wages in the cities. Let the workingmen get them, if they can, but the farmers of this country feel that they are working for an inadequate return. No farmer gets such an income.

"Even if he has gone out and endured the cold of the north in a dugout to win his homestead of one hundred and sixty acres—they feel that they are working without a fair return for these great aggregations of population in the cities.

"It is not enough to make it easy for them to borrow, necessary as that is. It is a poor help to let a man borrow himself into ruin and if you allow them to borrow to a great extent and encourage them to do that, you will create some day another cheap money question, as in 1896, when they desired cheap money in order to pay off the mortgages on their farms.

"Senator Pepper told you that one of the great questions of the day was the railroad question. The farmers of this country feel that the railroads are controlled from Wall Street, and that, because of that control, railroad rates are too high. The whole country feels that. Mystery is the mother of mistrust. Turn the light of publicity on the affairs of the railroads and if there is wrong doing bring it out, and if there is none, suspicion will be done away with, with the mass of our population.

"One of the heads of the greatest railroad system in this country told me the other day when the proposal was made that two directors should be named, one by the Government and one by the workingmen on each railroad, that he would welcome such a proposal and that the consequent publicity would be the greatest defence of that agitation for Government ownership of railroads, which will be acute next year.

"When you see the staid British Parliament seriously debating socialism, when a few days afterwards you read that the songs of the Internationale and the red flag are sung in its ancient halls, when in the great country of Russia priests are murdered and religion reviled, you know that in many parts of the world there is a fight to be fought if we are to preserve what we call 'civilization, religion and the family.'

"Turn the light of your publicity on the bigots who put an Invisible Empire above the rule of the Republic. I talked the other night with Governor Parker, of Louisiana. He told me of the brutal, cruel murders committed there that are unpunished, unavenged by the law because judges, jurors and district attorneys put allegiance to the klan above their oath of office.

"In another city of this country which I visited the other day, another klan murder is still unpunished. A few days before I had been there masked riders came in, took possession of the town, posted their sentinels and paraded for hours. One bold citizen tore the mask from one man's face, disclosing the features of the most prominent local bootlegger.

"The machinery of our Government has become so complicated that it seems far away from the average man. More than ever the guidance and the advice of the press is sought and you of the press will not fail; you will fight to preserve from political corruption, from socialism, from the Reds, this great, splendid America, the America of our fathers, of Washington, of Lincoln and Roosevelt—America still the hope and refuge of the world! (Applause)

When Lord Robert Cecil was introduced the audience arose and applauded. Lord Robert said:

"I am very nearly at the end of my visit to America. I am deeply sorry that it should have come to an end. I have, I hope, learned something; I have certainly enjoyed very much. I shall carry away with me a recollection of a kindness which is without parallel, a courtesy which nothing could disturb.

"Every American citizen whom I have met has vied with every other one to do every kindness he could think of to myself. I thank them, as I have tried to thank them frequently before, from the bottom of my heart.

"When I came here, there were some who suggested very courteously that it was not my business to come and talk about the League of Nations in America, and that nobody wanted to hear me.

"Well, all I can say is that there have been other opinions expressed to me, and I have had the opportunity of addressing a great many audiences—I am sorry to a very small part of those that were good enough to extend an invitation to me to address them—and I have found that whether they agreed with me or whether they did not agree with me, they shared Senator Pepper's view that this question of the foreign relations of the world was really one of the most vital questions for the domestic interests of every nation in the world.

"When I came, I ventured to say that I had two objects. One was to give such information as was in my power on the question of this great international experiment, the League of Nations. I have tried to give that information; I have attempted to answer all the questions that have been put to me on the subject.

"But I had another object which I also declared. That was to gain, if I could, information in my turn, to ascertain, if I could, what were the views of the people of America, so far as I could gather them, on this great question, not only of the League of Nations, but on the great questions that Senator Pepper has defined—the adjudication, the adjustment, the mediation of international disputes, and, in a general phrase, what was to be done in the present condition of affairs, what steps were we to take to prevent a recurrence of the world calamity, of a world war; what was the policy, not for themselves—I have nothing to do with that except indirectly—but what was the pol which they recommended with their knowle and their impartiality?

"Their very aloofness, alleged aloofness g them an advantage in that respect. They co judge of these questions apart from the turbing influences which are thought to pre in Europe.

"And I was anxious to know what adv they had to give to us as to whether we w going in the right direction; whether the st we were taking were right; whether they h same other plan which they thought was be for dealing with the great problem which ev one admits exists, and which every one adn in the interest of this country, no less than the interest of the rest of the world, must solved unless we are to face a catastrophe wh no thinking man likes to contemplate.

"Well, I remember the very first speech had the honor of making in this city. ventured to try and explain what I have doubt many of my hearers knew as well a did, how this kind of problem looked from other side of the Atlantic, how urgent it pears to us, what poignancy the interest excited, how we had all been within the so of the guns so to speak; we had been thro for four years passionate anxiety, terr griefs, shared, I know, by you, but perh not quite of the same degree as they fell u some of the European nations.

"I tried to describe a general scheme of thing and what it was attempting to do. ventured to put this question, a question which great respect I will venture to re tonight. This is really a terrible problem. you think that the methods, the solution w we are seeking in Europe is wrong, it is likely to be an instrument of peace, by means say so. We welcome criticism, of co But do not stop at mere criticism. If plan won't do, what plan do you propose in place?

"You may say, 'It is not for us to pro a plan.' Well after all, is that quite so? am not talking of the narrow interests America, the immediate interests, thoug think they are involved in world peace. after all, it is not mere slushy idealism to that nations do strive after something be merely making their financial position a better.

"Both of our nations, I make bold to have embarked on policies in times past only those which immediately subserve our interest, but those which we believe are the interest and for the safety and for progress of the world.

"Well, that at any rate is the case I vent to put. I have received a great many interesting comments and criticisms on policy which we are pursuing in the world. But I am not sure, if I may sa very respectfully, that there has been quit much constructive suggestion as I could wished. I may be wrong but if there ha has not quite reached my mind.

"I don't forget proposals which have made for a modified League. I am not g to discuss that kind of difference between The question is not whether this or that ar ought to be expressed or not. That is a s matter.

"The broad question is, is it right or wrong to have some system by which nations of the world can come together, work together, can co-operate together, schemes which all desire, which all regar improvements, and can discuss together temperate atmosphere, in an atmosphere peace, the difficulties and disputes which arise between them, not with a view of for a solution on this or that nation, but by com discussion arriving at some solution which be acceptable to both sides.

"That's the broad idea. I know that th not the way (by some people) the Cove was understood. I can't tell about that, b venture to make this appeal—do not in great question fraught with the lives and h ness of millions of men, fraught as I t with the whole existence of civilization, as know it—do not be led away into mere v criticism or minute detailed objections. Le as the Senator said, deal with the substanc the matter; let us try to find out what is real solution in broad lines that ought t achieved.

"May I ask you to study not only the cisms of the Covenant, but the Covenant it and not only the Covenant itself, as written down, but the Covenent itself a actually works, the operation of the Lea what it, in fact, does and what it tries t the spirit that it aims at creating?

"Mr. Gerard has told you and told you great truth that there is much unrest and turbance in Europe. He has repro Europe with the Armenian difficulty. I not sure that Europe alone should bear responsibility for that.

"He has reproached Europe with the—he reproached, in fact, as I understood him, League with the settlement of Silesia, but settlement of Silesia was one laid dow principle by the Treaty of Versailles, and League could not modify the provisions o Treaty.

"But whatever that may be, however may be, look not at what the League has

THE SOUTH'S

GREAT PURCHASING CAPACITY

The farmer is a true barometer of the prosperity of any state, section or country. If he prospers other business prospers. The South is now prosperous, and it is because her farmers are prosperous. Farming experts have taught the people that diversification of crops would yield a greater profit. This prosperity is reflected in Southern cities.

The South of today is not dependent upon any one crop nor limited to her agricultural resources.

The Southern States are estimated to possess 500,000,000,000 feet of standing timber —about 23 per cent of the country's total.

According to the Geological Survey, the South has estimated coal reserves totaling 565,000,000,000 tons. It is also estimated that the Southern States have 2,575,000,000 tons of iron ore.

The South has an estimated oil reserve of 55 per cent of the entire supply in the United States.

In manufacture the South has more than kept pace with the rest of the country, during the past decade, its value of manufactured output totaled over $9,300,000,000, an increase of over 210 per cent.

Added to this, with bank deposits of more than six billion dollars, is the purchasing power of these various articles showing their percentage to the nation's total production, about 100 per cent: bauxite, Fuller's earth, turpentine, rosin, cottonseed oil, peanuts, sugar cane and cotton.

The wide diversity of products and the large percentages of the country's supply which comes from the South clearly shows that the South occupies a position at the very center of the nation's industrial and commercial life.

ESCORTED DRY CHIEF TO "RUM FLEET"

New York Reporters Win Official Verification of Stories of Liquor Smuggling Activities Off Jersey Coast

Through the desire of New York newspaper men to prove the veracity of stories they had written, the United States Government on April 19, for the first time officially recognized the existence of a whisky fleet anchored fourteen miles southeast of Sandy Hook and twelve miles directly east of Red Bank, N. J.

Four Government officials, headed by Palmer Canfield, newly appointed Federal Prohibition Director for New York, accompanied a party of newspaper men aboard the Coast Guard Cutter Manhattan on a visit to the rum navy. The Government officials returned thoroughly satisfied that stories written by New York reporters concerning the ramifications of the rum fleet were not exaggerated.

The official visit to the liquor armada first was suggested to the Prohibition Department by Kent Watson, Federal reporter for the New York Herald, when Edward C. Yellowley, chief of general prohibition agents, called the rum fleet a myth. Watson invited Yellowley to go with newspaper men to Highlands, N. J., and see the fleet through a marine glass from the plateau. The idea was passed on to Mr. Canfield when he became director. He was "sold" on the proposition of taking a boat trip to the fleet with the newspaper men.

"The newspaper reporters," said Mr. Canfield, "have performed a distinctive service to the nation in revealing the existence of the rum fleet. I had never doubted the veracity of their statements from the first. The publicity given the operations of those buzzards of the ocean is having a great effect in changing public opinion. That rum fleet, thanks to our trip to sea, soon will be bankrupt from lack of business."

Anchored within a radius of a two-mile semicircle, the party of Government officials and writers who made the trip, found six liquor-laden craft. Each of the contraband vessels was circled by the Government boat and the officers board the British yacht Istar, flagship of the whisky navy, were questioned by Mr. Canfield and reporters. Attired in natty blue uniforms, braided with insignia of the British Merchant Marine, the officers chided the Americans, but displayed a courtesy withal. Equipped with wireless, the ship had picked up dispatches wirelessed from the Manhattan by correspondents of the Associated Press and United Press. They admitted this to Mr. Canfield.

As a result of the trip, Gloster Armstrong, British Consulate-General in New York, has been instructed by Sir Auckland Geddes, British Ambassador at Washington, to question the officers of the Istar and determine why officers of the British Merchant Marine are engaged in aiding smugglers to violate American laws.

Besides Mr. Canfield, the officials who made the trip were Capt. Byron L. Reed, divisional chief of the Coast Guard Service in New York; Lieut. Commander Michael J. Ryan, in charge of the boat; Congressman Emanuel Celler, of the Tenth Brooklyn District.

Newspaper men who accompanied the officials were Bruce Rae, New York Times; Kent Watson, New York Herald; V. G. Byers, Associated Press; Carl Victor Little, United News; Frank W. Getty, United Press; Arthur N. Chamberlin, New York World; Frank Henry, Evening World; Henry C. Caron, City News Association; Jack O'Donnell, Collier's Weekly; Forrest Davis, New York Tribune; H. M. Weeks, New York Evening Post; Fred E. Hamlin, New York Sun; John A. Chapman, Daily News; Will Carney, New York Evening Mail; Herbert L. Baldwin, Boston Post; Louis White Fehr, of the New York American, and G. L. Bower, of the New York Herald.

done. It is only three years old. You can't expect it to do everything. Look at what it has done! Look at what it has tried to do! Look at the atmosphere it has created! Those are the things that are really important if you want to arrive at a just consideration of this subject.

"For my part—you may believe me or not, I cannot control that—I believe, with profound conviction, that the League so far as it has gone has been a great success. I say that considering it as a human institution of great complexity, of great novelty. It has lasted only three years. I believe you would search history in vain for a record of any institution at all comparable which had lasted so short a time and yet had done so much of what it was created to do.

"I believe it has settled many disputes. I believe it has promoted international cooperation. I believe it has promoted international progress and improvement. I believe it has saved thousands, hundreds of thousands of our fellow creatures from terrible suffering. I believe it has done all this, and much more. I believe it has made a real serious beginning in creating that atmosphere which the ex-Ambassador so rightly demanded—that atmosphere of peacefulness, of a desire to agree, which is at the bottom of all schemes, which can hope to restore peace to earth.

"That is the claim I make for the League. As for whether it is going to exist or not, or whether it is going to last or not, I can only give you my own opinion: I believe there is no doubt whatever that the League will go on, that the League is alive and will live. It will live because the nations of the world which now belong to it cannot afford to let it die.

"I am satisfied it will live. I hope it will grow in power. But I do admit that I am anxious that its power, its prestige, its authority should be extended as soon as possible, because who knows when the overflowing flood will next come upon us? And it may be that it will attack us before we have erected our dykes and barriers sufficiently strong to resist its onset."

DURHAM (N. C.) SUN SOLD

Only Southern Republican Daily Outside Knoxville Changes Hands

DURHAM, N. C., April 25.—The Durham Sun, only Republican daily successfully published in this State and the only Southern Republican daily outside of Knoxville, has been sold by W. W. Weaver to George F. Sisson, formerly of Marion, Ind. Mr. Sisson will continue the Sun as an independent paper.

Mr. Weaver was manager of the Springfield (O.) Press-Republic when James M. Cox purchased that paper several years ago and made it Democratic, changing its name to the Springfield News. Remaining with Mr. Cox for a while as manager of the News, Mr. Weaver came South to establish a Republican paper by acquiring the Sun. Several months ago he began publication of the Southern Republican.

Not Frank Webb of Baltimore

The news announcement in EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week of the appointment of Frank D. Webb as advertising manager of the Barley Motor Car Company, Kalamazoo, Mich., seems to have given rise to an erroneous impresion that it was Frank D. Webb, of Baltimore, who was referred to. The latter is still advertising manager of the Baltimore News and American and attended the publishers' convention in New York this week as the representative of those newspapers.

DOLLAR PULLERS

Advertising and circulation managers are always on the lookout for new ideas that will increase advertising receipts and win new circulation. Your idea for increasing advertising or circulation may not appeal to your manager, but it may be just the thing that some other manager wants. EDITOR & PUBLISHER will pay $1 for each idea printed under this head. The fact that the idea is now being used in your city does not bar it from the department. Address your communication to the DOLLAR PULLER EDITOR. When they appear clip them and mail them in and receive payment. Unavailable ideas will not be returned.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER receives a great many requests for the names and addresses of contributors to the Hunch and Dollar Puller departments from newspapers anxious to get in immediate touch with them. Under the system of using only initials of contributors it has in some cases taken us six weeks or more to connect the wires. For this reason better service will be rendered in the future if the following form is followed in the case of each contribution to the departments:—Name of contributor, name of newspaper, employer or home address, name of city, abbreviation of State name.

ONE Southern newspaper has found it convenient to replace the system of paying employes by checks with a system whereby the weekly wage of each employe is deposited in the bank to the credit of that particular employe. The employe can go down to the bank on Monday morning and draw his own check for the full amount of the wages he earned the preceding week, or he can leave the money on deposit, checking against it as needed. It is claimed that the system saves considerable time in the newspaper office; it is also favored by the bank, for it is a strong inducement to the workman to keep a bank account. —Paul J. Thompson, University of Texas, Austin, Texas.

Recently I solicited copy from a local magazine store and was asked to make a few suggestions as to "What to advertise." Here's a suggestion that not only met with approval, but was tried out with satisfactory results. Nearly everybody likes to have something to "munch" on while reading, therefore, why not offer these two articles in combination? Place a half dozen or more stands in the show window, and on each stand lay the current issue of some popular magazine. Then on the magazine place pound box (opened) of some popular chocolate. Make a special price for Saturday only on the combination, but get full price for each if sold separately. I sold this idea to my prospect and if it is put over it will not only produce more advertising copy for the paper, but will push two lines for the dealer.—C. Newell Felton, 43 Cedar street, Clinton, Mass.

The Birmingham News has recently sold the Drennen Motor Company a full page to be used every Sunday by that company to print news of the trade and news interesting to the motorist. For instance, the page frequently contains items about how fish are biting out at the Warrior River. The News sells the page at advertising rates and tops it with an eight-column head, "Drennen's Sunday Automotive News."—H. B., Southern News Service, Box 2472, Birmingham, Ala.

Here's an idea you may be able to use on some recalcitrant merchant who insists there is no direct benefit from advertising. A Waterbury (Conn.) firm recently ran an ad headed "Bring on Your 6⅞ Size Heads." The store agreed, for one day, to sell any hat in the store of that size for $1.95. Naturally any man of the right size head saw a chance to save, and he showed up. The idea can be applied to a number of commodities.—Bruce Cole, The Echo, Prophetstown, Ill.

A "Questions and Answers" column in the department store advertisement would offer the ad manager a chance to work in that institutional or good-will advertising which many stores consider just as valuable as the daily price advertising. Show one of the department stores how to use a feature like this, and you probably will get an increase in space. Ostensibly the questions would be those asked by customers while shopping in the store, but the copy writer could bring in other questions to stress the service features offered by the store.—J. T.

A page headed with a guarantee that all the articles advertised under it are being sold at a 2, 5 or 10 per cent discount is easy to sell and the "Ads" bring results. The contract should contain a clause by which the advertiser agrees to advertise prices that are really at the discount mentioned in the guarantee on the page. The guarantee should be in a border similar to those used on legal documents to make the page more effective.—H. B. G.

There is always a demand in every city for window cleaners and there are not only firms who make a specialty of cleaning windows, but there are also individuals who make a specialty of doing so. Consequently the paper should have no great difficulty in getting up a combination ad of men engaged in such work. This sort of an advertisement could be run at least twice a year during spring housecleaning time and during the fall housecleaning time.—Frank H. Williams, 1920 Spy Run avenue, Fort Wayne, Ind.

The Nashville Tennesseean is co-operating with the Auto Sales Tire Company in conducting a contest. Every day the paper runs a picture of a car. If the owner is able to identify his own car he goes to the Auto Sales Tire Company and gets a Cupple's Cord Tire and tire cover. Object for the Tennesseean, of course, is advertising, but it has helped the circulation as well. Every fellow is looking for a picture of his car to appear.—H. B., Southern News Service, Box 2472, Birmingham, Ala.

Precedent is one of the hardest factors to combat in the country newspaper office. Just because a newspaper has been printed on eight pages for the last ten years is no reason why that custom must be followed every week. A dull time is coming and it may be hard to fill eight pages, so why not cut down to six pages and have a well-balanced, condensed newspaper, instead of one stuffed with a lot of trash just to print those two extra pages? There will be a nice little saving on paper also. Good times are coming, too, and if you stick by the eight-page custom, you're going to crowd out a lot of good news. Your same force can print two or four extra pages with less confusion than you'll have in trying to get everything into eight pages, once they get accustomed to changing sizes to meet varying conditions of business. This is done by some country publishers and they will tell you that they wouldn't go back to the old custom.—J. T.

U. S. COURT RESTRAINS PRINTERS' PICKETS

Open Shop Firm Proves It Is Engaged in Interstate Commerce and That I. T. U. Assisted Local Body In Strike Fight

Farreaching results in labor controversies may arise from a recent restraining order issued by Judge Faris in the United States District Court at St. Louis, enjoining the Allied Printing Trades Council and the St. Louis Typographical Union from picketing the shop of the Curran Printing Company, an open shop firm in St. Louis.

Curran proved the court's jurisdiction by citing that he was engaged in interstate commerce and he also showed that the International Typographical Union was aiding the local union in its fight against him. This, the court held, brought the case under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act and he thereupon issued a temporary restraining order.

Men interested in labor affairs of newspapers believe that if this decision is upheld by the higher courts, it will mean that whenever an international labor organization assists a local body in a conflict with a shop, the Federal Courts will assume jurisdiction, thus transferring these controversies from municipal or strictly local and state courts and eliminating the influence of politics from such controversies.

Circulation Outing May 21-23

New York City circulation managers will have their annual outing to the Catskill Mountains May 21-23. The party will leave New York on the Saugerties boat, foot of Christopher street, at 5.30 p. m., daylight saving time, May 21. All day Tuesday will be spent in the mountains and members who want to put in another day will this year be permitted to do so, as arrangements have been made for return to New York on the night boat from Saugerties on Wednesday. The Day Line boat leaving Catskill 11 a. m. Wednesday will accommodate those who want to be home Wednesday night. James McKernan, of the World, chairman of the Circulation Managers Association of Greater New York, is in charge of arrangements.

Newspaper Opportunities

Before purchasing a Newspaper send for "LISTINGS." April issue contains details of nearly 100 papers, including daily papers, needing from $100,000 down to $4,000 cash to handle. Weekly and semi-weekly papers of all sizes. Have some papers that can be leased. All parts of the U. S. represented. Our personal service plan enables publishers to find the exact paper they want. Secure a copy of "LISTINGS" before you buy. It's free and published thrice a month.

MUST HAVE MORE PAPERS

We have a large number of customers who are depending upon us for newspapers. Want to sell? List with us and save yourself the annoyance of curiosity seekers and those who want your paper and desire to work out the pay. We send you only actual buyers. We have some customers ready to go limit. No paper too big if the paper is worth the price. Also have those seeking small daily and weekly papers. Others who want to lease. No matter the size of your paper or where it is located, get our blanks, list with us and your paper will be quickly sold.

She figured in the sensational trial of her husband, Burton C. Webster, who shot a man named Goodwin for offering her an alleged insult. She had been convicted of public intoxication while living in New York and after she was no longer a stage favorite, but in 1899 she married John J. Scott and moved to Pittsburgh, where she alleged she led an exemplary life. The other woman, a police court character, was frequently convicted and on several occasions the World stated that the woman was the former actress.

Mrs. Scott sent her picture to the World that a statement that she was not the woman and requested that no further reference be made to her. The defense was that the story was privileged as a court report and the similarity of names and previous career of the plaintiff was a justification for the error and no malice was intended.

BUYING CORPORATION MEETS

Decides to Keep Its Machinery Ready for Paper Market Developments

Members of the Publishers' Buying Corporation met in a corner of the Astor Gallery during a lull in the Associated Press meeting, but took no action beyond deciding to keep the organization ready for action in the newsprint market during the coming year. Efforts will be made to bring into good standing the small proportion of the membership which has not kept up its interest in the corporation during the past year, and the annual meeting and election of officers will be held in New York in August, at a place and date to be determined later.

HUNCHES

Managing editors and city editors are always on the lookout for news and feature ideas that can be used locally. Editor & Publisher will pay $1 for each hunch published under this head. The fact that the hunch is now being worked successfully in your city does not bar it from this department. Address your contributions to the Hunch Editor. When they appear, clip them and mail them in and receive payment. Unavailable hunches will not be returned.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER receives a great many requests for the names and addresses of contributors to the Hunch and Dollar Puller departments from newspapers anxious to get in immediate touch with them. Under the system of using only initials of contributors it has in some cases taken us six weeks or more to connect the wires. For this reason better service will be rendered in the future if the following form is followed in the case of each contribution to the departments:—Name of contributor, name of newspaper, employer or home address, name of city, abbreviation of State name.

WHO has the oldest pipe in town? You will find old smokers who declare that theirs is old enough and strong enough to stand up and fight back at anyone who treads upon its sacred environs. Some pipe enthusiasts will tell you that the older the pipe the better the smoke; so there certainly must be some old ones in every town. Get a good reporter with the human interest bug in his veins to dig up a story from old pipe smokers. Incidentally, some extra advertising could be secured from local smoke shops in connection with the feature.—Ruel McDaniel, P. O. Box 683, New Orleans, La.

There are human interest stories in every line of work. Get a jeweler to tell how most young men ask to be shown wedding rings, a dentist to tell the question most asked of him, a furniture dealer to tell what article of furniture seems most important to those just starting out in married life, a police officer to tell what is the most popular alibi given by autoists who are arrested for traffic violations, and a waiter to tell how he can guess pretty accurately what his customers are going to order. This can be made into a very interesting local series.—Bruce Cole, The Echo, Prophetstown, Ill.

With the advent of spring there would come starry, moonlight nights when people will be glad to be outdoors and when their attention will turn more extensively to the stars and the moon than it has for many months. It would, therefore, be a good idea at this time of the year to run a story about the local people who have powerful telescopes and to tell how powerful these telescopes are and what the owners can see through them. Such a story would be unusual and timely.—Frank H. Williams, 1920 Spy Run Ave., Fort Wayne, Ind.

People have different ideas about how to relax after their work. Does the dancing teacher spend his recreation in dancing? Does the soda fountain clerk haunt the confectionery store after working hours? Does the librarian spend her spare time browsing about among bound volumes in the reference department? Assuredly not. A story on recreation of these and other persons would prove of interest. The story might be illustrated.—Daisee M. Leffler, Mary Spillar Hall, Eugene, Ore.

Aliens who want to alter their names radically to disguise their race may be "out of luck" in other states than Massachusetts. There, Judge James M. Morton, Jr., of the U. S. district court, would not allow Adolph Papkevitz to become Adolph Parker, but did allow him to change to Adolph Popkin, still indicating his racial origin. Hyman Sorocovech wanted to be Hyman Stone, but the court declined and he compromised by changing to Hyman Soroko. What do aliens and old-time Americans think of the court's decision?—James M. Mosely, 39 E. Concord street, Boston, Mass.

Your city ought to have an official flower which would be emblematic of the character of the city or which would be interestingly local. It would, then, be a good stunt to start a contest to determine what is the most appropriate flower for the city to adopt as its official emblem. All contestants should be required to write in giving their selections and reasons for selections in not over 300 words and the leading city officials should be the judges. A money prize might be offered for the best suggestion.—Frank H. Williams, 1920 Spy Run Ave., Fort Wayne, Ind.

What is happening to the old 1922 automobile license tags? Maybe a junk dealer can help to answer this question or a visit to some private garages will reveal a long string of tags on the front wall. Some figures on the cost of the tin used in making the tags, how many yards of roofing they would make and how much plaint was used in coating the tin would be interesting information for a feature story.—A. C. Regli, 541 S. W. Fourth Ave., Miami, Fla.

The Dalton (Neb.) Delegate is running a column entitled "Grammar Room." This column is written by the pupils of the class. A column like this should take well with the subscribers. Following is some of the stuff taken from the column in the Delegate:

"Frances has her hair curled now."

"We had a spelling contest Friday."

"Day by day in every way the county exams are getting closer and closer."

"Some of the girls in our room are learning to read deaf and dumb letters. They must expect to be deaf and dumb some day."

"We guess Henry Ford is visiting school today, his car is outside."

"These new Ford coupes will seat three strangers, but if they are well acquainted the machine will accommodate six."

"Mr. Mellberg has a cute little car. We wish he would take a hint."—A. R. Davison, 3624 No. 41st St., Omaha, Neb.

A little story hunch that gets right down into the women's cedar chests in the subscriber's home, is one that worked most successfully for the Parsons Daily Sun. A girl reporter wrote a story of a 20-year-old doll in the possession of a prominent physician's granddaughter, the doll having been handed down from the child's mother. The claim was made that this was the oldest doll in the county. Enough stories came in of other dolls older than that to run a daily feature for three weeks, some of the dolls being more than a hundred years old. Many stories included interesting bits of family and local history.—Hazel W. Myers, The Sun, Parsons, Kan.

DOLLARS OF THE WORLD
NEW YORK STATE

MAKE YOUR ADVERTISING REACH THE PEOPLE OF THIS STATE AND THE MARKETS OF THE NATIONS ARE YOURS

In New York State there are 217.9 people to every square mile—in other words, there are more possible customers per square mile than any similar stretch of country in America.

The city people in New York State number 8,589,844. There are 10 cities of over 50,000 population and 17 cities of over 20,000 and under 50,000 population. The city population of the cities represented in this list alone is 7,187,625 people or 70% of the population of the entire state.

All kinds of people are included—those who buy because of price and those who buy in spite of price.

In New York State you have a total of ten million people. For the most part average people, the kind that use the kind of goods you have to sell.
These newspapers can convince the people that your product deserves at least one trial. After that it depends upon the merits of the advertised product.

The Welcome of "PUNCH"

EVERY week in the homes of Great Britain "PUNCH" is the object of a National WELCOME. Every week the advertising columns of "PUNCH" afford welcome accommodation for discriminating advertisers who book spaces a long way ahead to capitalise that fact.

"PUNCH" cordially endorses the Invitation issued to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to hold their 1924 Convention in London.

¶ Twenty-four American Advertisers used space in "PUNCH" last year, their combined orders amounting to over 147 pages. More business was offered — but unfortunately too late to secure space.

Many orders have already been booked for 1924. Be in time!

VISITING AMERICA

To

1. Attend the Advertising Convention . . . . . Atlantic City, June 3-7.
2. Attend the Rotary International Convention St. Louis, June 18-22
3. Confer with Executives of Houses whose British Advertising he already administers
4. Discuss Prospects with intending Advertisers in the British Market
5. Link up with a leading American Agency for mutual representation

Fredk. E. Potter, Ltd., have been associated with the advertising of the following American products:—

Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pens, Waltham Watches and Speedometers, Pyrene Fire Extinguishers, Dennison's Tags and Crepe Paper, Dixon's "Eldorado" Pencils, Globe Wernicke Furniture, Libby's Evaporated Milk (Bill Posting) Ruberoid Roofing, Buick Motor Cars, Chevrolet Cars and Vans, Cadillac Cars, Oakland Cars, G. M. C. Trucks, Oldsmobile Trucks, Paige Cars, O'Cedar Polish Mop, Holophane Scientific Lamps, The Keeley Cure, Pinex, Emeralite Lamps, Jenkin's Valves, Parker Lamp, and others.

The Fredk. E. Potter, Ltd., Advertising Service Agency

The Agency was established in 1897 by the present Governing Director. Its record is one of continual progress. Rarely has a client left the Potter Agency. Each year has seen notable additions to its list of satisfied and successful customers. To-day upwards of 80 Firms—some of international repute—entrust their advertising to Potter's.

The Potter Agency is equipped to handle every branch of publicity. The Staff is large and well trained. Some of the principal members have been with the Agency 20 years or more, so that the business runs with a smoothness and efficiency not possible where frequent staff changes occur.

The British Market is a magnificent one for American Goods. The Potter Agency has had the satisfaction of assisting in the success of many American products in England. Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pens, Waltham Watches, Pyrene Fire Extinguishers are notable examples. The same thorough and efficient service is at the command of other high-class firms who intend exploring the British field. Mr. Potter's visit to America gives the opportunity of discussing with him the possibilities for any particular product. He will welcome enquiries.

Communications to Mr. Fredk. E. Potter during June should be addressed to c/o The L. E. Waterman Co. The Pen Corner, 191 Broadway, New York—and afterwards to:

GOOD RESOLUTION OF THIRTY CLUB ECHOES THROUGH AMERICA TODAY

JUST about two years ago the Thirty Club of London on the proposal of its President of that day passed a simple resolution of some words.

It is easy when a bunch of good fellows are around to move a resolution and get it passed with acclamation. But this was no event of that kind.

The proposer of that resolution had weighed his action well. He was a man who had been a prime mover in a great International Advertising Exhibition held but three months or so before. He was a Scot and in addition to knowing his own mind knew the men around him.

He launched his bolt and its boldness took his hearers by storm. There had been whispers that the President would spring a surprise on the Club during his year of office but none had an inkling of its import.

Its significance gripped the members of the Thirty Club in an instant. A few minutes given over to discussion and the resolution put to the meeting in due form was carried without a single dissentient voice.

The idea of inviting to London the Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World was born amid a sunburst of enthusiasm.

The story of subsequent events is told on another page. It is a record of a masterly effort to write a new leaf in the history of international business relations.

And now in a few short days we shall have the first fruits of that simple resolution in the shape of a strong delegation of British advertising and business men, visiting our shores with the serious intent of presenting in person to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World assembled in session at Atlantic City the formal invitation to make London the centre of its Convention activities for 1924.

That is the first stage—and it must be admitted that up to this point the simple resolution quoted on this page has been given effect in all sincerity.

AND now view the tremendous possibilities with which this simple proposal is fraught—potentialities as vast to America as to those who are its sponsors.

It is not difficult to visualize the viewpoint of our visitors and the country they represent.

Great Britain at heart has an unbounded admiration for America, Americans and American products and methods. Englishmen frankly admit it.

Out of that admiration has grown this splendid invitation. Britain says to us in effect, "We want to match our distribution, advertising and selling methods with yours. Come over to London. Give us the advantage of your deliberations and discussions in our midst. Show us—tell us—what you are doing, and in return we will give you all you impart and more. It will do our country good. It will do your country good, too."

Easy words, my masters, but this delegation is coming to tell us in more precise terms what they have in store for us. That betokens a world of earnestness.

And our American viewpoint?

Great Britain and her Dominions and Dependencies are America's best customers. That is a fact that must be held strongly before the Convention at Atlantic City, where our hardheaded business men will microscopically examine the programme and proposals of our English friends.

But is that all? Are we to decide Yea or Nay upon such a basis?

We think not. We believe that a mighty spirit of comradeship, of welcome to these Pilgrim Fathers of Advertising, Trade Ambassadors from a land that speaks our mother tongue, will prevail over all minor considerations; that careful ear will be given to their message and that Americans from every state will give hearty voice to a Resolution that will equal both in its simple expression and in its pregnancy, the vital message that brought these men to our shores.

Atlantic City—it is your move!

EDITOR & PUBLISHER believes that advertising and the interchange of commerce between America and Great Britain can achieve as much for international goodwill and prosperity as the press of those two great nations.

When the "On-to-London" movement was first mooted, EDITOR & PUBLISHER saw in it a means to that end. It believes that America would welcome the "On-to-London" proposal. Signs are not wanting that this belief was justified.

The Thirty Club of London have been working at three thousand miles range, with only the voices of men like Wilson-Lawrenson and Rankin crying in our wilderness as their disciples.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER determined to give the Thirty Club an opportunity to get close to the individual units of advertising interests, so that their story might have the power of the printed word behind it.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER despatched a Special Representative to London to assist its resident London Editor in producing an edition that would be worthy of the occasion.

This "On-to-London" number is the result, and it is issued in a fervency of hope that it will strengthen the bonds of unity now in process of forging and aid both nations and their representatives in their deliberations.

Resolved

That this Club invites the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to hold its Convention in 1924 in London, and appoints a Committee to organize an Invitation Committee consisting of every interest in this matter.

The Thirty Club of London once made a Good Resolution. It was conceived by Mr. W. S. Crawford and put to the Club during his year of office as President in 1922. It is bringing the new Pilgrim Fathers to Atlantic City.

ENGLAND NEEDS AD CLUB CONVENTION, SAYS BRITISH BUSINESS MAN

Declares 1923 Sessions in London Would Do Much to Increase Trade and Cement Friendly Relations Between the Two Peoples

By A BRITISH BUSINESS MAN

DOES GREAT BRITAIN need an advertising convention? Yes!

British advertising men who have shown such foresight as to ask the A. A. C. W. to give them their convention in 1924 are building better than they know. We are told that this vast organization of advertising clubs combines in its membership some 2,500 different units, with approximately 25,000 members, men and women interested in some form or other in the problems of distribution, selling and advertising. It may be premised that this membership includes the best brains in the business.

Now the problems of distribution, selling and advertising are much the same the world over. Certainly they must bear more resemblance to each other in the two great English-speaking countries, with their not dissimilar temperaments of race, their likeness in psychology, and their blood kinship, than any others. But though the problems themselves exist in the same character, it may well be that the solutions of each nation are different. Shall we not therefore welcome an opportunity for mutual discussion of those problems and examine side by side each one's solutions of them? That is the spirit which, we are also told, animates the business man of America; may it not be extended so that the interchange is between the men of the two countries instead of merely inter-State?

But does Great Britain need such a convention for her own good? She does. It is a point one is loath to stress, for it has been stated that when Sir Charles Higham was in the United States he was told that if he had appealed to the A. A. C. W. to come over and help he would have lost all hope of getting the convention.

Great Britain, however, does want and need such a convention. In our country we have not got the convention idea as the Americans have it, only in a small social way in a few industries. But our advertising and selling methods have advanced in such rapid fashion during the past few years that we want to crystalize them and to see in what way that development can be speeded up. We believe that America can show us in a convention the way to do this. We believe that such a convention held in London would lead to an advertising renaissance; and that by this means there would be secured a wider appreciation of publicity, an improvement in methods, and in due course an earlier return of that prosperity that means so much to international trade relations.

For prosperity of a nation is no local matter. The progress and development of business in Great Britain is bound up with the progress and development of trade in the United States—and elsewhere.

That is one view, but it has another aspect. What have we to offer the American delegates if they come to London? There is the great consideration of improving relations between the business men of both nations, and this deserves attention in itself. Broadly speaking, however, this is regarded by many as an abstract question, although in fact it touches each and all of us very intimately. So we must deal with the concrete and endeavor to show what Britain has to offer the American convention delegates.

We have a standard of advertising in Great Britain that is well worth seeing at close range. Our younger school of advertising men is producing campaigns of high value, campaigns that cover the whole gamut of distribution, advertising and selling, and these would amply repay the intimate inspection and examination that only a personal visit to the United Kingdom would permit.

It is common to say that a visit to the United States is a liberal education in business methods. But Americans who come over to England are the first to admit that they learn much from their visits. We are supposed to be many years behind our American friends in various ways, but this is not strictly true. The British business man, is a little slower to move, maybe, but it is not possible to change the characteristics of an entire nation. He is faced with the fact that tradition and custom enter into the daily life of every man, woman and child in the British Isles. Accordingly, he must formulate his plans to meet that known fact.

An Englishman is not so readily responsive to a new idea as an American—whether it be a fashion in socks or neckwear or a new factory plant. The silk hat and frock coat of the Victorian era died hard; some of our best known business men still favor them in their daily round. It will be many years before they finally disappear from the scenes of business.

The silk hat and frock coat are typical of English character. They die but are not killed. Their longevity is significant in learning to judge the bulk of English people.

We are not asking the American delegates to come over and see our silk hats and frock coats, but to realize that they stand for the conditions with which the enterprising business man has to contend. We believe it will be a liberal education to American business men to see the spirit that lies behind our silk hats and frock coats and to witness how the conditions which they represent are met in British selling methods.

There is in British industry a high regard for the super-excellence of their manufactures that has become a world-wide reputation. American manufacturers have shown us how to intensify production in millions. But there are still many British fields of manufacturing supremacy—not perhaps by weight of numbers but in craftsmanship. These are things so typically English that they offer an irresistible attraction to visiting Americans, and are assuredly among the matters of interest that will make England a place of fascination, that will make a strong appeal to the imagination of every American delegate whatever his business associations may be in the new world.

Financially, London should have a claim upon every man who has money invested in business. For upon London centers the gold standard of the world—London is the banking center of the nations—there a banknote is always worth its face value—it is the pivot upon which the money standards of every country revolve. London's financial institutions are one of the wonders of the world. Their operations are so closely bound up with the finances of the United States that they are worth special attention from a body of men who handle such stupendous sums of money as American advertisers do.

How closely those financial relations bind the two countries together may be judged from the simple fact that the British Empire, of which London is the hub, is far and away America's best customer. In one period of 1922 more than 40 per cent of America's exports were shipped to purchasers in the British Empire, Great Britain herself representing a share that totaled as much as the rest of Europe (except Germany) put together. Is it too much to expect that once in a while the Americans should give so good a customer a call to talk give so good a customer as Britain has proved to be a call to talk things over?

Great Britain sells goods to the United States, of course. In 1921 the British Empire was represented by something between one-fourth and one-third of American imports. Maybe we'll do better still, but meantime isn't it a sound idea to get together and see what we have that interests each other?

All these things are in the nature of putting it up to the business mind of the American man. Are there, then, no definite impressions of sentiment toward America as a whole from leaders of British thought that may be quoted as indicative of a desire for closer fellowship? There are, indeed, many, and even at the risk of their being considered abstract in quantity, some recent utterances might well play their part here as showing how Britain generally extends an open hand to America, and as pointing the fact that in calling for "London, 1924" as the seat of the Associated Advertising Clubs' convention, our business interests are but narrowing down the sentiments to a specific issue.

King George himself a few days ago sent a message to the company assembled at a London reunion of the British War Missions to the United States. That message concluded with the words: "His Majesty is pleased to hear of the unabated efforts of members of the society to make the peoples of the United States and Great Britain better acquainted with each other."

Earl Balfour, K. G., O. M., himself a figure endeared to many in the United States, in a paper on "Anglo-American Relations" in the London Sunday Times of April 29 last said: "The conviction that the free communities of English-speaking peoples, whether within or without the British Empire, have, whether they know it or not, too much in common to be to each other exactly what they are even to the most friendly nations with a different racial and historic background, is one which I have held far too long to be able now to abandon."

And, finally, America's own Ambassador at the Court of St. James's, Col. George Harvey, said a few days ago: "In future, England and the United States have to work together in perfect candor if they are to achieve great results. England was never more solid or more confident than today, and she is on the high road to prosperity and success such as followed in the wake of the Napoleonic wars."

"Great results!" It is a fine note to conclude upon.

Britain wants the 1924 convention for London. For the participants of both nations it should indeed show "great results."

H. R. H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

Special Message to
THE LONDON "DAILY SKETCH"

THE PRINCE OF WALES greatly appreciates your letter regarding the objects and hopes of the 1924 Convention of Associated Advertising Clubs of the World and realizes the advantages that would ensue from the holding of the Convention at the British Empire Exhibition.

FOR THE BETTERMENT OF ADVERTISING IS THE THIRTY CLUB'S SLOGAN

With High Ideals It First Evolved the 1920 Advertising Exhibition and Now It Has Made "On to London" the Advertising Message of 1924

By ERIC FIELD

Director of Erwoods, Ltd., London

WHEN eighteen years ago a few kindred spirits of what was then the younger school of advertising sowed the first seeds of the Thirty Club, they could never have dreamed of the tremendous projects that their little club was later on to promote. A pleasant little dining club was what they had in mind, directly and consistently concerned with practical advertising, always keeping in view the object expressed by the club's motto that heads this article. They were to do what they could for the betterment of their business more by inspiring other people than by carrying out great projects themselves.

Many and varied were its early activities. Idealistic they were always, only occasionally were they practical, but it says a great deal for the soundness of the ethics enunciated by the Thirty Club, that they left so great a mark on the advertising profession in Great Britain, doing much in point of fact to raise the whole standard of its practice.

It certainly was the progenitor of a better spirit in advertising and it carried out a great deal of missionary work, some of which is only now bearing fruit. It is difficult to name any single reform in which the Thirty Club as a whole or its members as individuals did not play a part. The agents' standard of practice, the adoption of the net sales principle, the suppression of fraudulent advertising—these are just a few of the matters in which the Thirty Club has had its share.

It certainly says a great deal for the influence of a small body of enthusiasts that a club of so limited a membership could achieve so much.

The creation of the Thirty Club can be traced to a meeting held in the office of P. C. Burton's Advertising Agency in 1905, when John Hart of the London Times was elected its first President.

Its actual originators were found among a little band of enterprising spirits including John Hart, Percy Burton, Joseph Thorpe, Ashby Goodall, John McBain, Oswald Greene, Charles Bridges, Philip Gee and J. Murray Allison.

The restriction of its membership whence its title was derived was adopted because it was felt—and as events have proved, quite correctly—that an exclusive but lively membership was far more desirable than a large and uninterested one.

Its early rules, which still govern the whole spirit of the club, were constructed to ensure that this liveliness should be maintained. The two most important were, and still are, firstly that election should be by ballot, two black balls excluding, and secondly, that anyone should cease to be a member who failed to attend two-thirds of the dinners. These rules have been rigidly enforced. Neither fear nor favor have been strong enough to prevent their operation. No matter how important a man may consider imself, he ceases to be a member of the Thirty Club if he does not turn up at the meetings, and a list of those thus forfeiting their membership would include many surprisingly important names.

Similarly, no wise candidate takes election as a matter of course. It is and has always been very difficult to become a member of the Thirty Club and it is safe to say that every year more candidates have been rejected than have been elected to the club. The principle governing the voters has always been that the candidates must have done and be capable of doing positive work for the betterment of advertising. No mere absence of vices is sufficient. The presence of definite positive virtues is required and this presence must be known. Many candidates who would have proved useful members have been rejected in the past simply because their work was insufficiently known to members of the club. They must console themselves with the reflection that if the Thirty Club had not always tried to be so exclusive they would not have wanted to be members, and that much may be forgiven those who try to set a really high standard of membership.

It is felt to be an honor to be elected but to be rejected does not necessarily imply any stigma of dishonor and the rejected, if they only knew, would find themselves in surprisingly good company. In a recent year ninety per cent of the proposed candidates were rejected. This jealous guardianship of the right of membership is of course a necessary consequence of the restriction in numbers.

But to revert to past history, for the first three or four years of its existence the club did not court publicity, but at the meeting on June 9, 1909, under the presidency of Thomas Russell, it was decided that "the time had arrived when publicity might with advantage to the advertising business generally be given to its proceedings." Accordingly the next issue of the London Advertising World published the following list of members:

Messrs. Percy Burton, Oswald Greene, Ludwig Wahrendorf, J. McBain, Thomas Russell, W. Penrhyn Penn, Joseph Thorp, F. C. Wise, Ashby Goodall, H. E. Morgan, A. W. Drew, G. H. Nichols, Burris Gahan, J. C. Kirkwood, G. F. Scotson-Clark, J. R. Charter, Keturah Collings, John Hart, Oswald Sickert, Herbert Owen, Ambrose Heal, T. H. R. Pring, S. J. Longden, Charles Bridges, J. Murray Allison, and C. F. Higham. My own election happened to follow at the next meeting.

At the same meeting J. Murray Allison was elected President, Sir (then of course Mr.) Charles Higham, Secretary, and Charles Bridges, Treasurer. In the report of a later meeting in the same year it was chronicled that "Mr. Charles Higham was brief and emphatic." That same winter saw the club run a series of meetings when intensely practical speeches were made by some of the most prominent advertisers of the day. Among them was Sir (then Mr.) Woodman Burbridge who in February, 1920, astounded those present by disclosing the fact that Harrods actually spent the huge (!) sum of just over twenty thousand pounds a year in press advertising. How things in advertising have changed since then!

On September 14th, 1910, under the presidency of George J. Orange, the Thirty Club provided Wareham Smith with a platform from which he propounded to a large and influential gathering of advertising interests his scheme for a permanent club house for advertising men. From this grew immediately the very successful and influential Aldwych Club.

The present campaign being run by the Thirty Club for the holding in London of the 1924 Convention is really a revival of plans laid in 1914, when the Thirty Club took what it hoped might be the first steps towards such a project in the formation of the British Association of Advertising under the presidency of L. H. Hartland Swann, with John Hart as Honorary Secretary. The association was modelled closely on the lines of the A. A. C. of W. The project was well conceived and the plans well laid to establish in every provincial city of importance local advertising clubs banded together in the one central association, it being hoped that every year England would have its own Advertising Convention and periodically would hope to receive American Advertising Clubs as guests.

The clubs that exist today in provincial cities in most cases owe their existence to the work. Members of the Thirty Club, Sir Charles Higham, John Hart, Percy Burton, Jack Akerman and others, addressed meetings all over the country, getting committees together, and a large and well attended meeting was held in London finally to approve the scheme. Unfortunately just as things were maturing well, the outbreak of the war necessarily put a stop to the scheme, and like so many other societies in England, the Thirty Club suspended its activities until the majority of its members should return from the job of cleaning some augean stables on the Continent of Europe.

It was not in fact until February, 1920, that the club really gathered itself together again. Its post-war presidents include Sir Charles Higham, W. S. Crawford, and John Cheshire, Managing Director of the great firm of Levers.

At a meeting held during that month the first plans were made for the great Advertising Exhibition at the White City, London. After nine months of strenuous work, the Exhibition opened its doors to the waiting public and achieved an amazing success. Every day and all day the public waited in queues a mile long. It received the honor of the biggest Royal visit ever accorded to an Exhibition. The King, the Queen, Queen Alexandra, the King and Queen of Norway, Princess Mary and the Queen of Denmark all attended.

It filled the columns of the newspapers and the advertising pageant that passed along the staid streets of London was cheered by thousands who lined the route as thickly as for a Royal Wedding. No more successful piece of work in bringing home to the public the economic value of advertising had ever been done before and one of the benefits we Britons shall gain from the Convention that we hope will visit London in 1924 will be a still greater success in the same direction.

The 1923 roll of Thirty Club officers and members includes the following:

President—John Cheshire.
Vice-President—W. S. Crawford.
Hon. Treasurer—Philip Emanuel.
Hon. Secretary—C. Harold Vernon.
Committee—W. B. Robertson, J. C. Ackerman, Eric Field, T. B. Lawrence.

Full Members—Sir Charles F. Higham, Lionel G. Jackson, Leslie Harwood, H. Samson Clark, James Walker, Hugh N. Hunter, P. C. Burton, Chas. Bridges, Wareham Smith, Ivor Fraser, R. P. Gossop, E. S. Baring-Gould, Geo. J. Orange, George Sparkes, F. W. Vanden Heuvel, Ernest Morison.

Associate Members—Louis Kaufman, A. Wardle Robinson, Walton Harvey, U. B. Walmsley, F. E. Bluff, Alfred Pemberton, Gerard W. Gibbs.

For 1924 the officers will be as follows:
President—C. Harold Vernon.
Vice-President—John Cheshire.
Secretary—W. S. Crawford.
Treasurer—Philip Emanuel.

It will assuredly add to the pleasure of the Atlantic City Convention to know that "London 1924" will see the same roll of officers playing the part of hosts as now represents the leadership of the delegation to Atlantic City.

PRESIDENT OF BRITISH BOARD OF TRADE HOPES FOR SUCCESS

THE proposal to hold the Advertising Convention in London next year has aroused widespread interest and is one which I cordially support.

An interchange of views between the leading advertising experts of this country and the United States will doubtless assist the growing commercial interchange between the two countries, and I hope that the British Delegation which is now proceeding to America to present the official invitation will be successful in their mission.

SKETCH ISSUES U. S. EDITION

London Picture Daily Gets Out Fine Ad Club Number

The "Daily Sketch," ordinarily published simultaneously in London and Manchester, has just produced a remarkable special edition for America. It is a regular "Daily Sketch" in form, full of pictures as usual, and all its news features arranged in the way in which its English readers are accustomed to see them. But it is vastly different. It is "On-to-London" propaganda, cleverly contrived and an editorial and pictorial masterpiece in its way.

Messrs. E. Hulton & Co., Ltd., proprietors, have scored a knockout.

This "On-to-London" Daily Sketch is a full size 24-page paper. The front page is a portrait of the Prince of Wales with his message. The first news pages, usually devoted to national affairs, are laid out in that style, but the news consists of special articles and interviews and paragraphs dealing with a dozen different aspects of London as the center for next year's convention. Here, too, are thumbnail pictures of British advertising folk and good stimulating editorials that will make American readers do some thinking. Clever and caustic articles and comments, more pages of pictures, a fine collection of representative British advertisements—even the racing news—and this interesting picture paper is laid down with a smile of admiration.

You may have had a copy—they're intended for you, but if not send a post card to J. Dodds, Daily Sketch, Shoe Lane, London EC4, England, and one will come along. You ought to see this!

Learn to Punt and Stay Dry

No trip to London is complete without a visit to Richmond-on-Thames, the gay river resort where one may hire a punt, or flat-nosed flat-bottomed river boat propelled by pushing a pole along the river bottom, and experiment with the great English art. The amateur punter usually thinks that it is a simple game, to be achieved merely by planting his punt pole firmly on the river bottom and giving a determined shove. Such a process usually lands him in good fresh river water at the first push, but once learned, the punting art becomes a favorite pastime with American visitors.

SPIRIT OF BRITAIN WILL BE EXPRESSED IN EMPIRE EXHIBITION OF 1924

Will Bid for Visitors from Every Part of the World With Greatest Industrial Exposition and Congress in the History of the British People

By HERBERT C. RIDOUT

London Editor, EDITOR & PUBLISHER

THERE are hundreds of sound reasons why the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World should vote London, 1924, for their convention. Some of them will be found in these pages, others will be presented by the British delegates at Atlantic City in a few days.

There is one more that should make a strong appeal to American imagination. In May, 1924, London will be the centre of the greatest exhibition ever held in the United Kingdom, the British Empire Exhibition. To make it, British industries are arranging for the display of the greatest triumphs of their crafts, the Overseas Dominions and Dependencies will be represented by special buildings in which will be shown the natural products and manufactured commodities of every part of the British Empire.

At Wembley, on the outskirts of London and a fifteen minute electric train run from the heart of the city, a park of some 216 acres is being converted into a town of delight. Within its walls will be found represented the arts and sciences, the genius and skill of industry, the greatest sports stadium in the world, and a playground for a nation.

The patron of the British Empire Exhibition is King George, the President of the General Committee is the Prince of Wales, and the Chairman of the Executive Council is the Duke of Devonshire, Secretary of State for the Colonies. Under such distinguished patronage, it may be taken as certain that no stone will be left unturned to make it a success worthy of the Empire in whose interests it is being created.

The reason for it is another fact that will appeal to the imagination of Americans. Since the war, Great Britain has been working hard to repair the losses thus incurred, to show a brave face to the world, and to present itself as a solvent customer in the markets of the universe. Some great mind, looking back over the pages of history, discovered that in the past, boom years have synchronized with great exhibitions. Napoleon in 1801 conceived a national French Exposition, and such an impetus to the nation's trade and industry did it prove that he decreed others to follow, all of which had the same effect. Similar research showed that the Great Exhibition in London in 1851 was productive of a vitalizing influence on all classes of manufactures, and other lean periods were transformed into years of prosperity by succeeding exhibitions in 1862, 1867 and 1886. So it was decided that 1924 should see an Empire Exhibition to bring back to Great Britain and its Dominions some of its former prosperity.

The mammoth scale on which it is being constructed is necessary to accommodate all those who wish to take part, the originally planned 126 acres having been exceeded by the demands made by the Colonies and Dominions.

The Exhibition will attract visitors from all parts of the world. It will be the showroom of the British Empire—the pivotal centre of its business interests.

But it will have a special interest for America, for it is definitely fixed that if Atlantic City accepts the British invitation, the 1924 Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World will be held within its conference halls. Leaving nothing to chance, believing that our American cousins will pronounce their decision in a mighty "Yes!", there are actually being built Congress Halls to accommodate the Convention.

Of these fine Congress Halls now under construction, one will hold 2,000, another 500, a third 300, and two others smaller numbers still, with committee and reception rooms in large number.

Thus, the A. A. C. W. Convention delegate to London, 1924, will not only be welcomed as such but he will be an honored guest at what Great Britain feels will be the finest thing she has done yet in exhibitions.

The scope of the British Empire Exhibition has hitherto only been hinted at. Now, it is possible to take the intending visitor a little closer, for, by the courtesy of Mr. W. S. Crawford, the Honorary Director of Publicity to the Exhibition, the writer has been conducted over the grounds—at present in the main a bewildering maze of fences, girders, steel arches, and intersecting railroads.

From the northwest entrance we step into an English garden, green lawns like velvet, roses and thousands of other typical English flowers in gorgeous profusion—a first impression of simple loveliness that only an English mind could plan. Thence we leave by the central avenue, a fine broad gravelled pathway that leads southward to a mighty edifice that, at first sight, suggests a huge magnification of the Roman amphitheatre. That is the Stadium, the dominating architectural feature of the exhibition, as well it might be, seeing that it will hold 125,000 spectators.

As our eyes drop from this gigantic structure, we become aware of two magnificent buildings, one on either hand. That on the left is the Machinery Hall, built (with five full-gauge railroad tracks running through it) to house some of the machinery of which Great Britain is so proud. On the right the Industrial Hall, the repository of many wonders of British industry. And through the Industrial Hall, in a fine roomy building, is the commodious Conference Hall for the 1924 Convention.. Together these two great buildings cover more than twenty-five acres—over a million square feet—truly showrooms of a gargantuan shop.

Crossing the lake, two imposing pavilions greet the eye—that on our right the home of Australia and its natural and manufactured products, the other representing Canada. Skirting these, we find India, Burmah, West Africa, East Africa, Hong Kong, West Indies, Malay, New Zealand and South Africa, each pavilion having been built by the country whose name it bears. Farther afield, there is the Amusements Park and an Experimental Farm.

Perhaps the greatest interest will centre upon the mammoth Machinery and Industrial Halls and here it is clear that there will be complete representation of British industries. Thus, the British Engineers' Association are organizing the shipbuilding, marine, mechanical and general engineering exhibits, and the British Electrical and Allied Manufacturers' Association have taken up the task of organizing all the electrical industries exhibits. These two bodies have together undertaken to fill the whole of the Machinery Hall, which at present covers an area of 466,000 square feet. The British Chemical Manufacturers' Association has similarly undertaken to organize the chemical section, for which 25,000 square feet has been reserved, and the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders and the British Cycle and Motor Cycle Manufacturers' and Traders' Union Ltd. will organize the motor and cycle section. These two bodies have requested that the Engineering Hall may be extended in order to provide room for their exhibits, and an addition of 70,000 square feet to this building is now being provided for. The Bradford Branch of the Federation of British Industries is preparing a scheme for the representation of the woolen trades, and the Empire Cotton Growing Corporation has undertaken to organize an exhibit illustrative of cotton production throughout the Empire.

The United Tanners' Federation has undertaken the organization of the tanning and leather industries section, and among other trade associations who are co-operating in the organization of exhibits are the Federation of British Music Industries, the British Brush Manufacturers' Association, the Wine and Spirit Association, the Paper-makers' Association, the Federation of British Pottery Manufacturers, the Liquid Fire Extinguisher Manufacturers' Association, the India Rubber Manufacturers' Association, etc., etc.

It will be seen that Great Britain is going to do this thing properly. Work was only started in March, 1922, but within 11 months the great Stadium was finished and the first Football Cup Tie Final was played in it on April 28th. The principal halls—Machinery and Industrial—are to be completed by August, 17 months from their beginning. This, and the ceaseless hum of activity that arises from every corner, suggest that there isn't very much wrong with British will to work if only the job's there.

And behind the scenes, there are men working till their eyes grow dim to make this Exhibition a success—planning big things, co-operating with folk they have never seen, breathing always the spirit of comradeship, fashioning a mighty chain of invisible links to bind an Empire's trade. Not the most conspicuous of them is Mr. W. S. Crawford, holding the onerous office of Honorable Director of Publicity. He it is who is telling the world what Wembley stands for, staking his repute as an advertising man on selling the British Empire Exhibition to every man who ever heard of England. And, as he happens to be the Vice President of the A. A. C. W., his success in doing this should be as much a matter of concern to the U. S. as it is to us.

The British Empire Exhibition is going to be an achievement of which the British will be proud. He is going to invite all the world to come and look in his shop windows in 1924, and knowing that when John Bull has something to show it will be something worth seeing. The world and his wife will leave their farms, their factories, their home-towns and their own particular interests and flock to London.

To American advertising men the Britisher is saying something more. He is holding out both hands, and he says "Come and look in our shop windows, by all means. But come over, bring your little sheaf of papers on salesmanship and advertising, and let's sit down and just talk until we know each other better. We're homely, but we'd just love you fellows to drop in for a chat."

And in our great Exhibition there is an empty hall. It will accommodate 2,000. Surely between us, we can fill it for four days in June, 1924.

VISCOUNT ROTHERMERE ASSURES HEARTY SUPPORT

WILL YOU convey to your committee the assurance of my hearty support of the 1924 Convention, whose members I hope to see in London? My journals will assist in every way to make this Convention in London a success.

ROTHERMERE.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE EDITION

Nichi-Nichi's Venture Is Lauded by Japanese Officials

(EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S Far Eastern Bureau)

TOKYO, April 13.—Tokyo's youngest English-language newspaper, launched yesterday morning by the Nichi-Nichi in conjunction with its Japanese edition, was toasted last night by government officials and invited newspaper men at a dinner given at the Nippon Club. The speakers were T. Takagi, managing director of the Nichi-Nichi; Frederick Moore, former Associated Press correspondent, now adviser to the Japanese Foreign Office; M. Zumoto, editor of the Herald of Asia; Robert Scripps, head of the Scripps-Howard League of newspapers who is now in Japan with his father, E. W. Scripps, on their private yacht, the "Ohio"; B. W. Fleisher, proprietor and editor of the Japan Advertiser and Trans-Pacific; and Mr. Yoshizawa, head of the Asiatic Bureau of the Foreign Office.

The Nichi-Nichi's English edition is a four-page, seven-column newspaper, similar to the English edition which the Osaka Mainichi, the Nichi-Nichi's sister publication, launched a year ago. The news services and advertising department of the Japanese edition will be at the disposal of the foreign-language paper, which is making a bid for circulation on the strength of low subscription rates. The monthly rate is one yen, equal to 50 cents. Each copy costs 5 sen.

CANADA SPEEDS MAILS

Newspapers to Use Distinctive Labels on Delivery Sacks

Arrangements have been completed between the Canadian Postoffice Department and the Canadian Daily Newspaper Association and Canadian Weekly Newspaper Association, whereby distinctive labels will in future be used for sacks dispatched from newspaper offices.

Publishers of daily papers will use labels of bright red cardboard, with address printed in black in bold-face type, while weekly papers will use yellow labels similarly printed. Bulletins have been issued by both associations directing the attention of members to the matter and urging them to cooperate to minimize postal delays and secure quicker service.

"CATCHING ONE ANOTHER'S WAYS," LORD BURNHAM'S IDEAL FOR LONDON, 1924

"THERE is a saying in the West Indies that seems to me to hit off admirably the ideal of the proposed Advertising Convention for London next year. There they speak of 'Catching one another's ways.'"

This was the reply of Viscount Burnham, proprietor of the London Daily Telegraph and Chairman of the Newspaper Proprietors' Association, to EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S question as to his views upon London, 1924.

"That we view the idea with entire approval you will see from the fact that the Newspaper Proprietors' Association is sending a delegate to Atlantic City in June—Lieut. Col. Lawson, who is also representing the Daily Telegraph," said Lord Burnham.

"There is no doubt about the internationalism of business. America must sell to us and we to America. The Advertising Convention in London would mean that our American visitors would be here to see and appreciate for themselves our conditions, our manufactures, and our people. Such a Convention, too, must mean an extension of the financial side of international business.

"I am not a believer in anything but the exchange of goods between America—and other countries, of course—and ourselves.

"I think we shall be able to learn much from our visitors. The more we study the recent development of American advertising, the clearer it becomes that they have transformed it into a fine art. I believe this is largely due to the type of man engaged in American advertising. It is a calling that attracts a higher class of men—many of them university men. As a result it is generally looked upon as being on a higher plane than it is regarded here. And, of course, the fact that such men are engaged in advertising must mean, in turn, a better, higher standard of publicity.

"As you know, I have a wide experience of conferences and conventions in connection with the press of our own country and in the work of the Empire Press Union. We have seen the results of such conferences in many directions—effecting reforms, improving communications, and accelerating news, in some of which benefits our American friends have shared.

"So I welcome the idea of the Advertising Convention for London. Everybody will benefit—the representatives of both nations—from the attention so drawn to the methods of each, and from the personalities engaged.

"I welcome the Convention as a means of 'Catching One Another's Ways.'"

EDITION EDITED FROM 3,000 MILES AWAY

A UNIQUE PRODUCTION and one of which all concerned are somewhat proud, this On-to-London Number of Editor & Publisher is in another sense a journalistic achievement. It was produced in New York, but it was edited three thousand miles away—in London.

For once—and in pursuance of Editor & Publisher's desire to give London a platform from which to tell its story—the headquarters staff turned over the reins to the paper's London editor, Herbert C. Ridout. He it is who planned its contents, secured the interest of so many prominent English business men, arranged for all the contributions emanating from the British side, and, in short, enabled this publication to present so imposing an issue.

Even in this there shines the "On-to-London" spirit, for Mr. Ridout's activities have been animated by a personal desire to see the A. A. C. of W. Convention in London next year. He is himself advertising man as well as journalist.

Mr. Ridout will come to America as a member of the British delegation to Atlantic City.

To aid Mr. Ridout in his work on this edition, Editor & Publisher dispatched to London in March a special representative in the person of H. Rea Fitch, and the measure of personal indorsement of the Thirty Club of London's invitation, as expressed in the announcements of so many British houses in this number, is due to this successful combination of English and American forces. Mr. Fitch had made a trip to London in the interests of Editor & Publisher once before, in 1921, when a London Survey was produced, and his welcome from British publishers and advertising men then has been duplicated on the present occasion. He made many friends in England and was several times the guest of well-known personalities there.

To these men—our London editor and our special representative—and to all others who have assisted to make successful this number (notably the officials of the Thirty Club of London, without whose close and cordial co-operation little could have been done) Editor & Publisher expresses its acknowledgements.

MEET THE TWO PRESIDENTS OF THE THIRTY CLUB

Personality Sketches of John Cheshire, President of the Noted Organization, and C. Harold Vernon, President-elect, Leaders of British Advertising Club Delegation

TWO men who will stand out among the British delegation from the Thirty Club of London to Atlantic City are John Cheshire and C. Harold Vernon.

Mr. Cheshire is the reigning president of the Thirty Club, and as such official head of the delegation.

Mr. Vernon is president-elect, having been voted to the chair at the April meeting. He will be the official head of the proceedings in London next year.

Mr. Cheshire is managing director of the largest commercial house in the British Isles, and, incidentally, the greatest of all British advertisers—Messrs. Lever Bros., Ltd.

He is a real advertising man. He was advertising manager of Messrs. Lever Bros., Ltd., and his promotion to managing director was regarded as a compliment to the profession of advertising.

Mr. Cheshire is a personality. He is an English gentleman, and has the gift of winning instant confidence. His restrained manner and quiet method of conversation give an impression of shyness. But it is sheer unassuming grace.

His views on advertising are broad; on the matter of securing the convention for London in 1924, precise and definite. He believes advertising is capable of much greater expansion, and is perfectly frank in declaring that the convention in London would mean a new awakening of interest among British manufacturers, that it would create and stimulate a new confidence in advertising and advertised goods in Great Britain. He admires the way in which the public of America has been educated to regard advertising as a vital factor in business, and believes that a similar result would obtain in his own country following such a convention.

And he believes most of all that for every material benefit Great Britain receives from that convention, it will be able to repay the visiting delegates threefold.

In a special message to EDITOR & PUBLISHER Mr. Cheshire gave the following reasons why American advertising experts should confer with British advertising experts at the 1924 A. A. C. W. Convention in London:

"The invitation which the Thirty Club is issuing to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to hold their 1924 convention in London is backed by the conviction that its acceptance would benefit both American and British interests. It is no idle dream of an advertising enthusiast that a meeting of the men who exert so tremendous influence on public opinion in the New and the Old World would be productive of the highest good from all standpoints.

"We want this country to feel the striving force of American faith in advertising and we want America to see London and our country through the eyes of its trained observers and publicists.

"It is not only London they would see. If the invitation is accepted, visits will be arranged to great industrial centers and to the famous beauty spots of the British Isles. There will be opportunities for American experts in every phase of business to meet and confer with our greatest business and financial authorities.

Surely it is not too much to say that social and intellectual intercourse between those who transact business of these nations and who spread the romantic story of commerce in the same tongue, would be instrumental in promoting that understanding, regard and friendship which is the forerunner of the co-operation desired.

"As president of the Thirty Club I hope with the support of my fellow members to carry our invitation to the Convention at Atlantic City in June and to express it in such terms of genuine cordiality as will secure its acceptance."

IN Mr. Vernon we have another type of Englishman.

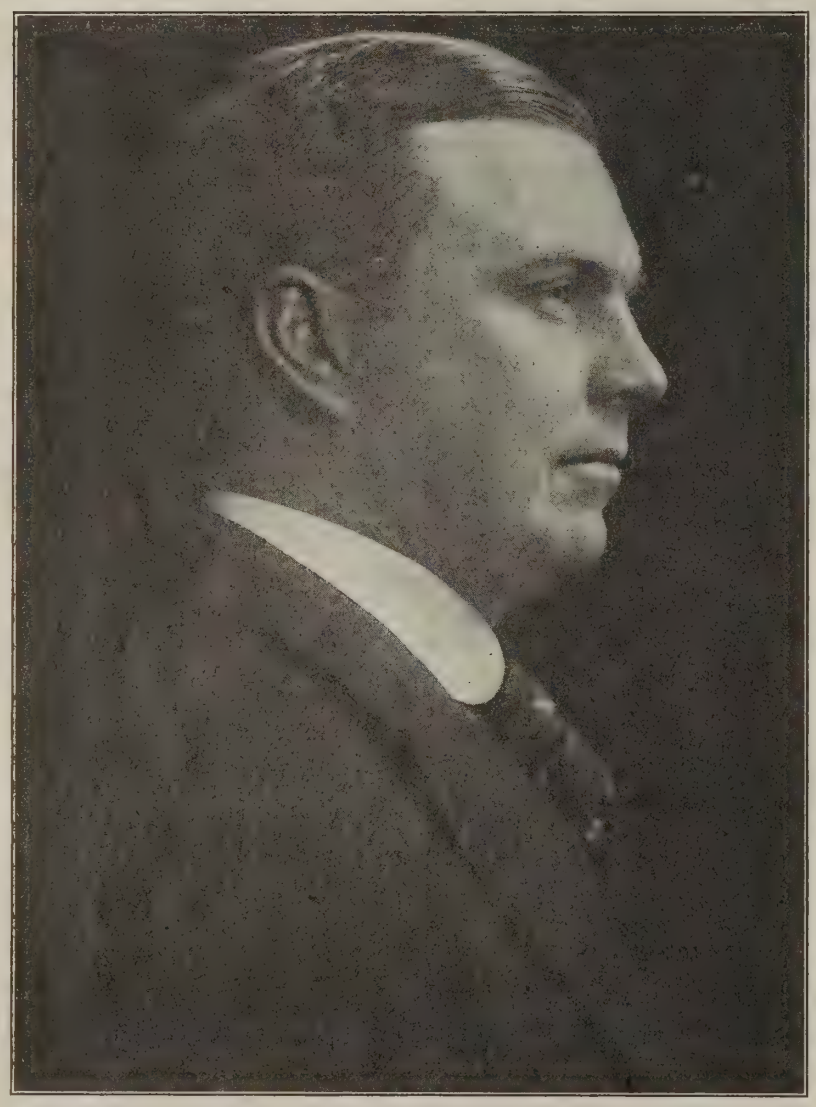
Here is robust, athletic youth, a type almost American, with squared shoulders and open face.

Mr. Vernon is the principal of the old-established advertising agency of C. Vernon & Sons, Ltd., located on Holborn Viaduct, London, with branches in Liverpool, Glasgow and Paris. The agency includes among its clients many important and representative British advertisers—names that stand out prominently in their respective spheres. In addition he is a director of several manufacturing and merchandising companies and directs the advertising policy of these organizations.

Mr. Vernon is a man of truly secretarial ability—as every advertising man should be and rarely is. He is brisk and crisp in manner. No time-waster, but with the facts of whatever matter is being discussed at his finger ends.

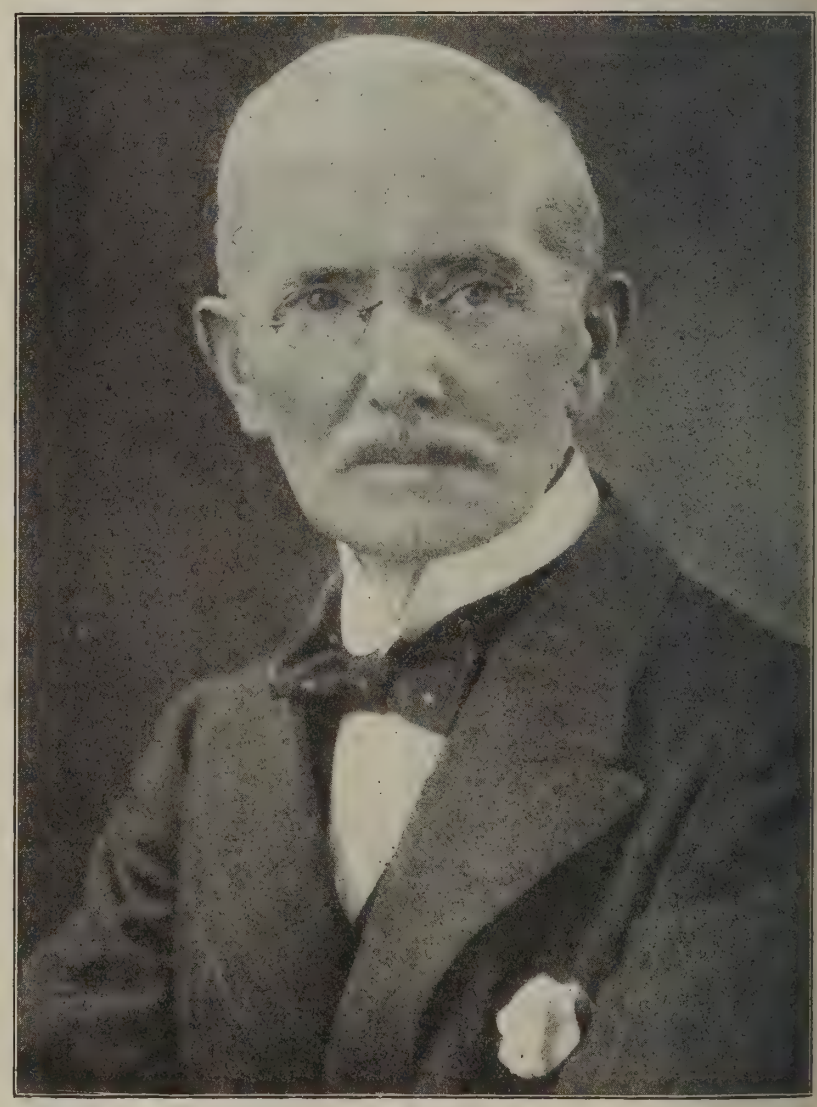
To him, almost solely, belongs the honor of having made arrangements for this delegation. When Mr. Wilson-Lawrenson left London, Harold Vernon's work began.

The Thirty Club had such confidence in their present secretary that they elected him president for next year.



And when the convention comes to London, for its 1924 sessions its delegates will see that that confidence was not misplaced.

OUR COVER



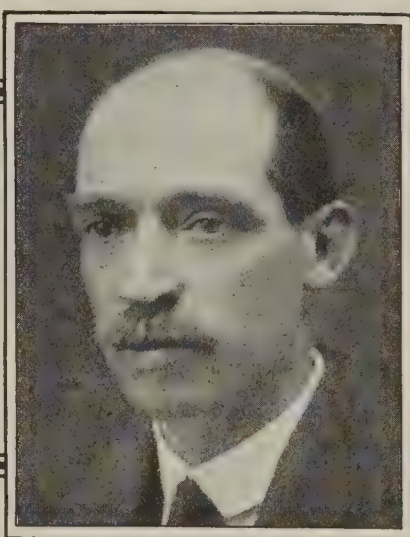
THE BEAUTIFUL DESIGN which decorates the cover of this edition of EDITOR & PUBLISHER is the gift of John Cheshire, president of the Thirty Club. In planning this number EDITOR & PUBLISHER placed this cover at the disposal of the Thirty Club of London for their use with such a design as they might feel would assist in the general scheme of advancing the On-to-London movement.

Mr. Cheshire accepted this offer and took upon himself the task of finding a suitable design. Some of the best artists in London were invited to submit drawings, and Mr. Cheshire's choice fell upon one received from the Norfolk Studio, London, the execution of Garth Jones. The result is seen upon the cover.

The artist enjoys an international reputation. His symbolic designs used at the opening of the Selfridge Store several years ago made a lasting impression. His pictures and decorative designs have been used by many publishers and advertisers including the Packard Automobiles, Sunlight Soap, Harrods, Wanamaker's, etc.

C. HAROLD VERNON

JOHN CHESHIRE



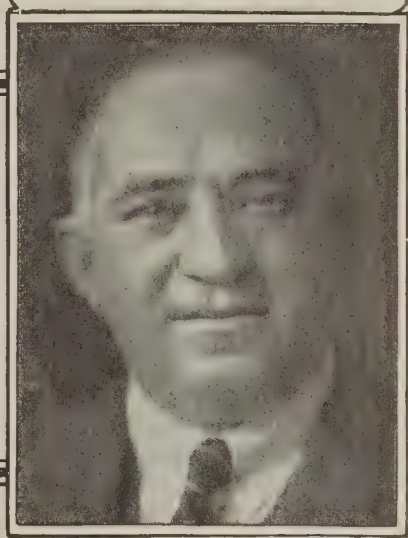
AMONG OUR BRITISH VISITORS

E. Herbert Morris, advertising manager of Lotus & Delta Shoes, Stafford, climbed into advertising by the stairway of the short story. During his 50 years, he has been assistant manager in a big department store, literary assistant to Burroughs, Welcome & Co., manager of a cinema producing firm, and partner in an ad agency.

H. Dennis Bradley is sole proprietor of the firm of Pope & Bradley, tailors of 14 Bond Street, London. He is regarded as writer of the most original literary advertisements in England. Noted also for versatility as dramatic author, producer of intellectual plays, and critic of drama. His "The Eternal Masquerade" in 35th thousand.

Fred Shoesmith, managing director of Fairy Dyes, Ltd., ascribes much of his success to following his father's advice and as a youth associating with older and more experienced men, as well as to active church work. Born in 1874, he began in business in Scotland in 1901. He now controls the dyes firm, which has a big export trade.

W. B. Baxter, managing director of John Harding, Son & Co., Ltd., Nantwich, is the largest single clothing manufacturer in the British Isles, being only shareholder in Harding's, which has branches in Manchester, London and Dublin; Baxter, Horner & Co., Ltd., Victoria Mills, Hunslet, Leeds, and W. B. Baxter & Co., of 34 York Pl., Leeds.



Harry Clegg, provincial sales manager to Kalamazoo, Ltd., Birmingham, arrived at his post of sales manager from "counter jumping" by way of commercial traveling. He is 47 years young and admits he is learning every day. He is a thorough believer in careful sales planning, and especially in selection of the salesmen.

Herbert Neaverson, Peterborough, has been connected with the sales department of John Mackintosh & Sons, Ltd., for 25 years. Has also established a large retail business, with five branches, in his own name. He believes it absolutely essential that a closer business relationship should be formed with the United States.

Thomas Walley, joint manager of Cochran & Co., Ltd., boilermakers, Annan, Scotland, only upright boilermakers in the world who work on mass production lines, is a fully trained engineer. He is a lieutenant in the R. N. V. R. His duties include supervision of head office sales and advertising departments of Cochran & Co.'s factory.

A. G. Rossiter, managing director Rego Clothiers, Ltd., may be described as a pioneer of the British Multiple Clothing Trade, having established in the last 20 years more than 50 retail shops within and around London. He is a firm believer in the advantages of publicity of the right kind, and real value for every article sold.

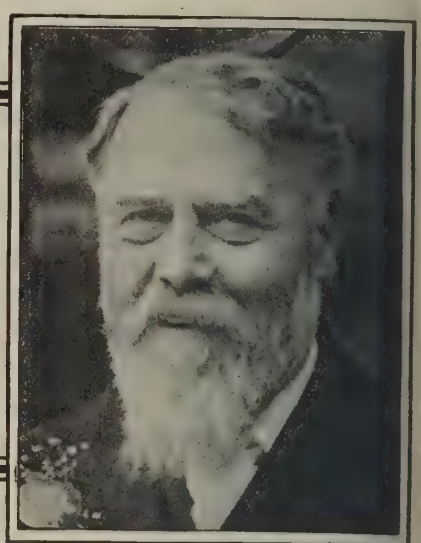
Arthur Taylor, advertising manager of Eno's Fruit Salt, one of England's boldest, oldest and most consistent advertisers, ascribes much of his success to early association with Americans and Canadians in agency work. He visited the United States for several months after the war. He has also been engaged in commercial art production work.

Robert W. Hutchings, a governing director of G. F. Hutchings & Co., Ltd., Bristol, manufacturers of shoes of character, under the style of "Excelsior." Across the front of their factory run the words "A shoe of beauty and a joy to wear." Mr. Hutchings wants to see the Advertising Convention in London and is here to show his support.

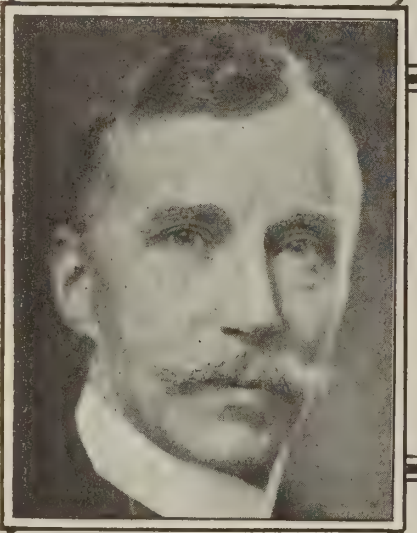
Ernest T. Walker is managing director of Wolsey, Ltd., Leicester. He is the eldest grandson of Robert Walker, founder of R. Walker & Sons, hosiery manufacturers in Leicester. Ernest Walker was the first to introduce the power of advertising in the hosiery trade. Wolsey, Ltd., owns 13 mills and three warehouses in Britain.

E. E. Futcher, works manager of Dunkleys, Ltd., Birmingham, accompanying Mr. Dunkley. Comes along because he spent last year's vacation in the pine woods of Maine, and now wants to see our business folk and learn something of their ways of trade pay. London 1924, however, will continue his chief talking point.

AMONG OUR BRITISH VISITORS



J. H. Allen, assistant sales manager of James Pascall, Ltd., London, manufacturers of the famous Pascall sweets and chocolates, is only 30. He believes that, just as the present convention affords opportunity of a better understanding of American methods, so London in 1924 would be of similar profit to American business men.



E. D. Girardot, chairman and managing director of St. George Carriers, Ltd., London. His publicity interests lie in the direction of telling the British public that he is rendering a service by producing better automobiles for less money. There are a lot of things he would like to have Americans know about England and believes the 1924 convention will help.

Arthur S. Porter, principal of Arthur S. Porter & Co., Liverpool, manufacturers of cotton cleaning waste, founded his business in 1905 and made it one of the best known firms in Lancashire. He is an admirer of American methods and believes in keeping on, keeping on advertising. He has declined all "calls" to enter politics.

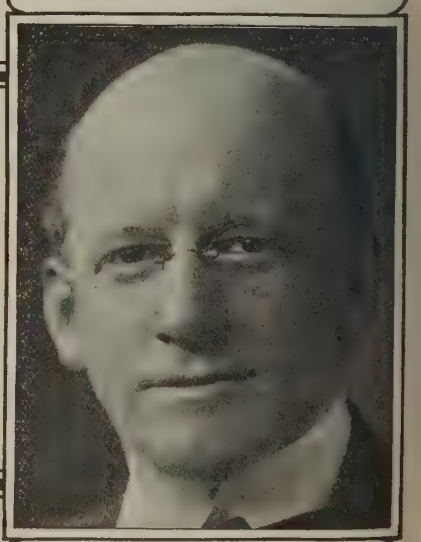
W. H. Dunkley, principal of Dunkleys, Ltd., Birmingham, makers of baby carriages, has his own ideas on advertising and believes in it all the time. At 65 he is as alert as at 21, especially when fighting competitors trying to infringe on his patents, of which he holds more than 70. He visited Chicago during the Single Tax convention in 1920.

Frederick E. Potter, principal of Fred'k E. Potter, Ltd., Kingsway, London, is one of the best known figures in the British agency world. His firm numbers among its clients the English house of the Waterman Pen, an outstanding success in the British market. A man of high principle which he carries into business, he is also of repute in the social fields.

Eric Field, principal of Erwoods, Ltd., Agency, is a native of Australia. Formerly editor of the English edition of Printer's Ink, advertisement manager of the Times, and advertising manager of the Caxton Publishing Company's great mail order house, he is a Thirty Club committee member of long standing, and incidentally a lieutenant colonel of His Majesty's army reserve.

L. D. Falk is managing director of D. J. Keymer & Co., Ltd., London advertising specialists, handling such accounts as Rolls-Royce cars, Venus pencils, Repolin paint, etc. He has 30 years' experience in agency advertising, and has traveled widely, being a leading authority on the Indian colonial market. He was a delegate to the Boston Ad Club convention.

Lieut. Col. E. S. Hutchinson is director (city advertising) of the London Press Exchange. He served eight years as an officer in the Highlanders in Egypt, India and Central Africa. Won D. S. O., M. C., Legion of Honor and Croix de Guerre in France. Diplomatic service 1919-1921 Central Europe. Author and painter. Organizer Daily Mirror Fashion Fair this year.

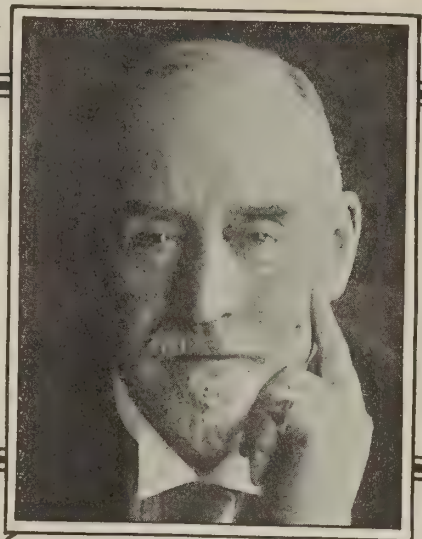


Fleetwood Pritchard is a popular younger member of the British delegation. He is the head of his own agency, Advertising and Publicity, Ltd., of London, which is giving a great deal of attention to American advertising. He has two good reasons for wanting the 1924 convention for England, namely, better understanding of Britons by Americans and better understanding of Americans by Britons.

Arthur John Greenly, chairman and managing director Greenly's, Ltd., service agency. Considers his concern a department store of advertising. The agency side handles some of the largest accounts in the United Kingdom. He is for London in 1924 because he believes American advertising men will get a different viewpoint and an interest in theirs to open their eyes.

J. G. P. Hunt, director of Samson, Clark & Co., Ltd., advertising agency, first joined that company's staff in 1910 and did such effective work that this year he was promoted to the directorate, and is now generally responsible for contact, copy, and the many production departments. He is one of the younger men of the British advertising profession.

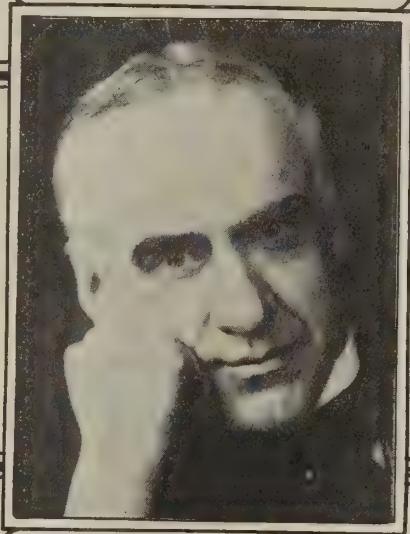
Arthur Chadwick is chairman and managing director of Amalgamated Publicity Services, Ltd. For 25 years he has been actively engaged in fostering postal publicity, or, as they say in the United States and Canada, direct mail advertising. He has been connected with the Rotary movement since 1915, and is the chairman of the Sales Managers' Association, London.



AMONG OUR BRITISH VISITORS

Brian Walton Rowe, director of Langham Artists, London, advertising artists, was assistant advertising manager at A. & F. Pears in 1919, director of Langham, 1920. Supervises production of art work at Langham's for agencies and advertisers. Is chairman of the research bureau of the Publicity Club of London. Served three years in way, wrote part of army manual.

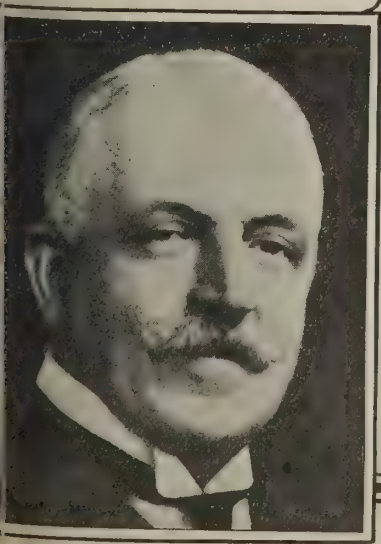
Leslie Vernon is a brother of C. H. Vernon, the honorary secretary of the Thirty Club. He is associated in the business of C. Vernon & Sons, Ltd., London, and is contact man for some of the largest advertising agency accounts operated in the British Isles. He is a strong advocate of the proposal to get the national advertising club convention to England next year.



Thomas McDougall is governing director of Thomas McDougall, Ltd., Kingsway, London, and an authority on railway carriage advertising. Controls spaces in the carriages on three railway systems. Formerly was a force behind Multiplex Advertising Signs. Has traveled extensively, knows America well, yet remains a true Scot, interested in all things Scottish.

Andrew Milne is honorary secretary of the Publicity Club of London, and 1924 convention organizing secretary for the Thirty Club. He has been 21 years in advertising, and closely associated with James Black Agency. He took over the secretaryship of the Publicity Club in 1913 within a few weeks of its formation, and did a great deal toward making it a genuine success.

ieut. Col. Edward Frederick Lawson is assistant managing proprietor of the London Daily Telegraph. He was born in 1890. He was in the Paris and New York offices of the Daily Telegraph. During the war he was awarded the Distinguished Service Order and Military Cross. He represented the A. P. A. of London at the Press Congress.



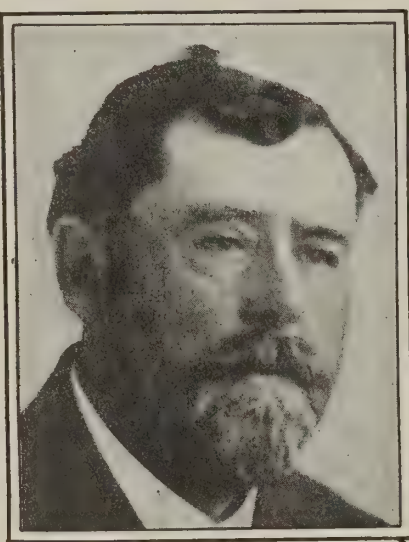
Horace S. Imber, advertisement director of the Daily Mail, Evening News and Weekly Dispatch, London, represented various American manufacturers in Great Britain before entering the ad field. Introduced first free wheel bicycle, first steam car and first water meter in England. Hates personal publicity, giving this picture under protest.

Philip Emanuel, advertisement manager of Odhams Press, Ltd., has under his control the ad pages of John Bull, Ideal Home, Passing Show, London Mail, Picturegoer, Pan and other magazines, and the Kinematograph Weekly, and Motion Picture Studio. He joined Odhams nine years ago, leaving an agency business in North of England.

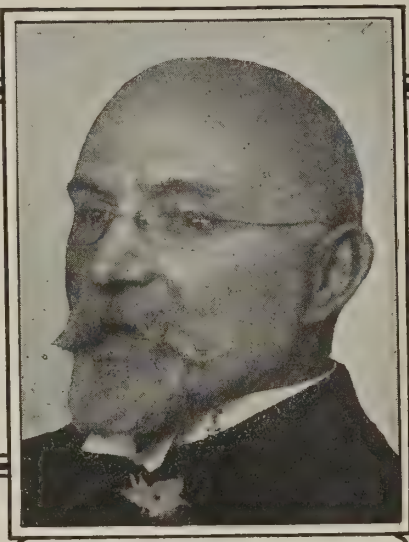
Ulric B. Walmsley is right-hand man to J. Dodds, advertising director of the Hulton Publications, but still finds the time to act on committees of both the Thirty Club and the Publicity Club. He is secretary of the On-to-London Committee. He has done much for advertising in general, and enjoys meeting folks.

orge W. Mascord is general works superendent of United Newspapers, Ltd., own- the London Daily Chronicle and Lloyds wws. Has had wide experience in newsper production in Australia, South Amer-, Europe, Canada and England. He presents the Daily Chronicle in the present delegation to Atlantic City.

William T. Day, London advertisement manager Pioneer Press of India, is a keen enthusiast for the betterment of advertising. Won Crawford Challenge Cup in 1920 for an advertising thesis. Has toured India and dominions on advertising and selling conditions. Active in Publicity Club. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts.

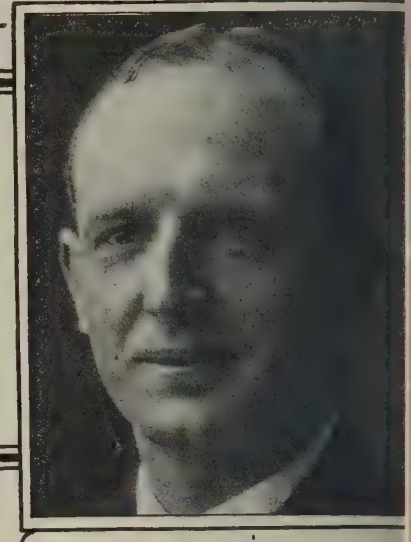


W. T. Wallace, director of the National Trade Press, Kingsway, is a producer of super-artistic papers, including the Drapers' Organizer, Furnishing Trade's Organizer, Footwear Organizer, and Men's Wear Organizer. These are unique in color printing and quality of typography. He came originally from the Toronto Saturday Night.



W. Raymond Derwent is general manager of the Nottingham Journal and Nottingham Evening News, two of the Starmer Group of papers. He is a believer in the young idea in advertising and publishing, and has joined the delegation to the Atlantic City convention of the Associated Clubs of the World to further the achievement of it.

AMONG OUR BRITISH VISITORS



Fred Johnston is London representative for the Liverpool Post and Mercury, having seen 45 years' service in Fleet St. On relinquishing active representation for the Liverpool papers at the end of last year, he was the recipient of a hearty tribute from his colleagues in the newspaper and advertising field.

H. Casaubon Derwent is managing director of the Bradford & District Newspaper Co., proprietors of five Yorkshire papers. He began his career as a printer's devil, and rose to the top positions in the literary and commercial departments. He is a justice of the peace in the city of Bradford, and prominent in the Masons.

E. J. Robertson, general manager of the London Daily Express, is one of Fleet Street's young men—being 30. He is a native of Canada, and came to the notice of Lord Beaverbrook while serving in the Canadian Corps in France. He is also general manager of the Sunday Express. Cable, "Express, Fleet, London."

Ewan S. Agnew is a director of Bradbury Agnew & Co., Ltd., proprietors of Punch Educated for the diplomatic service, he saw service in France and Egypt as a lieutenan in the Royal Irish Lancers, and was staf officer to Field Marshal Allenby. He stoo as a Liberal candidate for Commons at th last election.

George Scott represents the Glasgow Herald and associated newspapers. He is secretary of the Thirty Club's Finance Committee, vice-president of the Association of Advertisement Managers, and a member of the Aldwych and Fleet Street Clubs. A genial "Scott" with a nice wit, and a popular figure in the Street of Ink.

"ALL BRITAIN WILL WELCOME YOU"—LLOYD GEORGE

(Special Cable to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

I AM glad to hear that influential representatives of British advertising are leaving this month for America personally to convey to the convention at Atlantic City an invitation to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to meet in London next year.

London, and indeed all Britain, will warmly welcome so notable an assembly of men whose purpose is, as I understand, to seek to quicken the pulse of world trade by discovering and developing new markets for the sale of merchandise.

Such conferences help in the interchange of merchandise more precious perhaps than any material goods, namely, thought, sympathy, understanding, and mutual good-will. For upon these things the whole fabric of commerce is really built.

D. LLOYD GEORGE.

H. H. Jauncey, unofficially representing th Independent Newspapers, Ltd., of Dublin is an expert on printing. During his sta in America he will make a close study o methods in vogue on this side of the At lantic Ocean, with particular regard to colo work, in which he is especially interested Meet Mr. Jauncey!

Roy Clark, advertisement manager of Advertiser's Weekly, London, was formerly associated with the Bristol Times and Mirror, advertisement controller of the Daily Mail (Western Edition), London Evening News, and Assistant Advertising Manager of Selfridge Store. A good fellow who will go far and get there.

Robert Bruce, director and London manager Aberdeen Newspapers, Ltd., took charge of the London office on the amalgamation of two papers in the Scottish city. He believes that the ad convention in London would be of great value as an opportunity to show American visitors the possibility of expansion in the markets of Britain.

Patrick T. Montford, advertising manager Freeman's Journal Newspaper Co., Ltd., Dublin, is the only representative of the Irish Free State in the delegation. He was successively reporter, sub-editor, circulation manager, and ad manager. He is a Rotarian. He says he wants to see what U. S. can show a fighting Irishman.

One day the English Market will be your immediate objective

EVERY MANUFACTURER or merchant house marketing branded, guaranteed goods successfully in America has, we believe, a future in England. Except for the stretch of ocean, there is no gap dividing England from America worth mentioning. You will switch from sales records in Ohio to those for, say, the English Midlands, without any real differentiation of thought.

BELIEVING this, we desire you to remember when you are setting out to market in England that your advertising can be safely entrusted to us. We have an organization running under the impetus of success. It is trained and equipped to give a thorough and complete service, adequate to carry through the highest responsibility and trust. It is serving successfully many first-class advertisers in England and its reputation for integrity of purpose and good work will bear closest investigation.

IF WE CAN help you to form your plans of operation in England by information touching your goods and their prospects, let us know.

LONDON CONVENTION WOULD BROADEN SCOPE OF A. A. C. W., SAYS VERNON

Thirty Club Secretary and President-Elect Says Some Sessions Must Be Held Outside America to Justify "World" Title

By C. HAROLD VERNON

Secretary of the Thirty Club of London and Its 1924 President

SINCE IT BECAME KNOWN that an invitation to bring the 1924 convention to London was to be extended at the Atlantic City Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in June this year, American advertising men are probably asking why it should be in London.

The answer is that if the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World is to live up to its title it is necessary that at regular intervals it should hold its annual convention outside the borders of the United States of America and Canada.

In view of the close relationship existing between America and Great Britain, London is the obvious place for it.

Advertising plays an important part in international relationships, for the advertising men in Britain and in America are those who shape and form public opinion. An interchange of thoughts and ideas between such men must certainly establish a better understanding between the business men of both countries.

The present need of the world is for more business, and the big door for more business is unquestionably the export markets.

A convention in London such as contemplated will not only bring American and British manufacturers and buyers into personal contact, but delegates will attend from all European countries, Australia, South Africa, India, China and Japan.

One of the problems to be dealt with at the convention would be the working out of a code for the protection of national and international trade-marks and patents, a matter which has caused manufacturers in all parts of the world considerable trouble and inconvenience for many, many years.

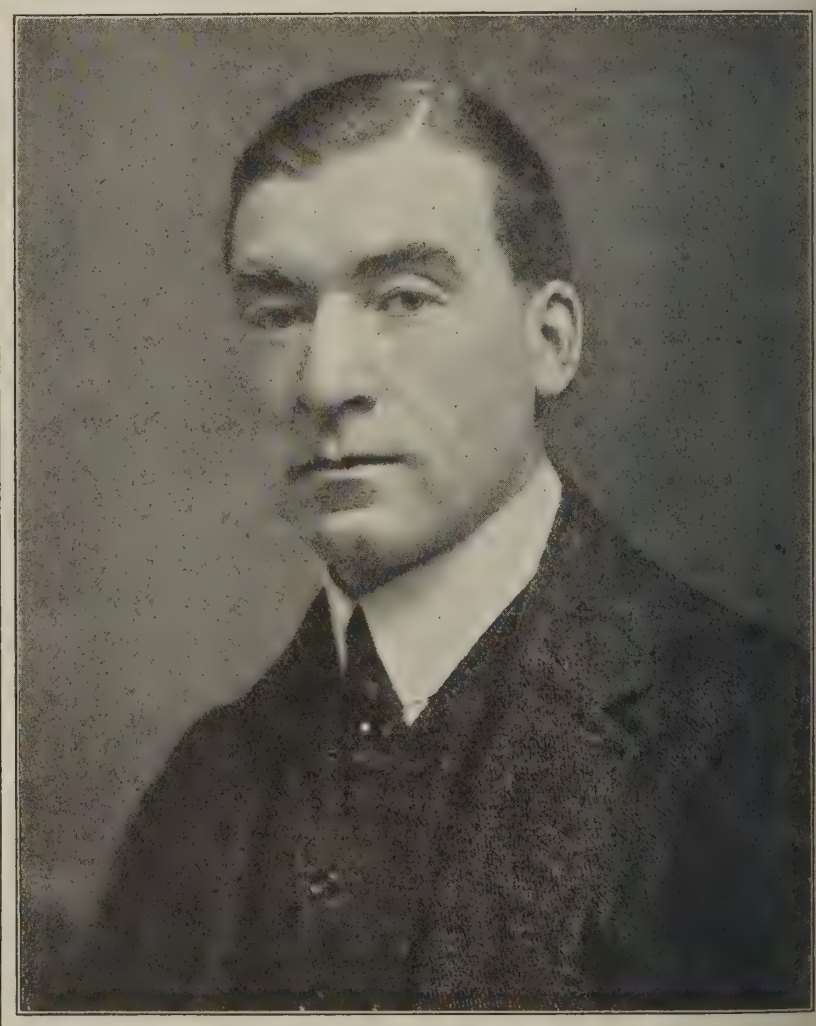
Many markets have been closed to traders by reason of the complicated condition of the patent laws and proceedings in operation in different countries.

The problems of distribution, as affected by local conditions in different parts of the world, would also be considered, and useful information would be exchanged on this important subject.

The questions of store advertising, multiple shop advertising, and advertising by trade organizations are other subjects on which information could be exchanged with great benefit to both countries.

These and many other problems of a similar character would form part of the 1924 convention.

A proper appreciation by each country of the relative taxation which its citizens are called upon to pay will do much to explain the difference in spending power in the various countries represented at the convention. The need of one country to purchase goods manufactured by another will be brought to the fore, which should result in a stimulus which will quickly be appreciated by the manufacturers of the article in which each country specializes.



These advantages have been quickly realized by a large number of trade organizations, both on the British side and in America, and there are indications that a convention in London such as proposed will receive the enthusiastic support of manufacturers' and traders' associations, the members of which are eager to learn of alternative methods of manufacture and distribution.

Already the Thirty Club, which is responsible for issuing the convention invitation, has been approached by groups of manufacturers and trade interests in the provinces, urging that the delegates be invited to visit other parts of the country where they can study and confer with those engaged in similar business with a view to exchange of useful information.

The invitation to hold the convention in London has the enthusiastic support of all the principal advertising groups, newspaper societies and associations. The following bodies have already indorsed the Thirty Club invitation:

Newspaper Proprietors Association, Weekly Newspaper and Periodical Proprietors Association, Newspaper Society, Scottish Daily Newspaper Society, British Association of Trade and Technical Journals, Association of British Advertising Agents, A. B. A. A. Audit Bureau, Association of Advertising Managers, Incorporated Sales Managers Association, Advertising Club of Ulster, Incorporated Society of Advertisement Consultants, Incorporated Association of Retail Distributors, Incorporated Society of British Advertisers, Aldwych Club, Publicity Club, Fleet Street Club, United Billposters Association, British Association of Display Men, Federation of Master Printers.

At present the Thirty Club is the only English club affiliated with the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, but it is expected that before the convention takes place many other clubs and associations will apply for affiliation. Already

SIR EDWARD HULTON

IT is with the greatest possible pleasure I endorse the proposal to invite the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to hold their Annual Convention in 1924 in London.

Nothing could be thought of that would better help to cement the friendship between your country and ours.

On behalf of my newspapers, and personally, I hope you will come. We will do our part to make your visit pleasurable and profitable.

EDWARD HULTON.

London, E. C. 4.

the Association of British Advertising Agents has taken this step.

In America the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World have a combined membership of 60,000, and it is expected that at least 1,000 delegates will attend the convention in London during next summer.

Special committees have been established to deal with finance, and already a sum of 15,000 pounds has been raised towards the entertainment fund. Another committee is dealing with the question of entertainment, and offers from private and municipal bodies have already been received.

The principal newspapers throughout the country are enthusiastic for London in 1924, and are prepared to support the convention project financially and editorially.

BRITISH CLUB TO GET BIG SEND-OFF

Thirty Club Representatives to Sail on Berengaria May 26—Newspapers Devote Much Space to Convention

By Herbert C. Ridout
(London Editor, Editor & Publisher)

AS THE DAY of the departure of the British delegation for Atlantic City draws nearer, the interest heightens, and the work of those engaged in the task of forming the delegation becomes more and more strenuous. The appointment of Andrew Milne, of the Publicity Club, as organizer and convention secretary should somewhat lessen the pressure on W. S. Crawford and other leaders.

This is reflected in the attention being paid by the press throughout Great Britain to the Atlantic City convention. During the past few days newspapers up and down the country have been generous with space, a fact due in some measure to the enlistment of support from the Newspaper Society, the Newspaper Proprietors Association, and the W. N. P. A., all of which have circulated to their publisher-members special press material with the recommendation that it be used editorially.

A convention rally of the Thirty Club has been arranged for May 23, in connection with the May dinner of the club three days previous to sailing. At this dinner all the delegates will be present, as well as representatives of the various clubs and associations who have joined with the Thirty Club in presenting the On-to-London invitation to the American club. The dinner will be in the nature of a send off.

The "Berengaria" will sail from Southampton Saturday, May 26, at 4:30 p. m. As the liner has just completed a record run on its homeward crossing of five days 18 hours and 26 minutes, it is considered possible that an effort may be made on the occasion of the advertising delegation trip to equal or beat that record. In that event, the "Berengaria" may arrive about midday on Friday, June 1.

Hotel accommodation in New York has been arranged at the Hotel Pennsylvania for June 1 and 2, and at the Ambassador at Atlantic City for five nights, June 3-7. After Atlantic City the majority of the party will return to New York, the headquarters being the Thirty Club bureau at the Pennsylvania, this being also arranged as the mail address for the English delegates for their fortnight in America.

All arrangements for entertainments and special visits have been left in the hands of the committee appointed by the president of the A. A. C. of W., which is planning a reception in New York and trips before and after the convention to Washington (to be received by the President of the United States), Baltimore and Philadelphia, and an excursion on the Hudson River to West Point. The more extended tour to Chicago has been abandoned.

ADVERTISEMENTS SHOW BRITISH SENTIMENT

Thirty Club's Invitation to Entertain Ad Club Convention Next Year Is Backed Up by Newspapers, Agencies and Manufacturers

THIS EDITION of Editor & Publisher has a special significance. It tells the story of the Thirty Club, but it does more. It reflects the indorsement of that story and the invitation it covers by many leading publishers, advertising agents and other business houses in Great Britain.

These men, feeling so strongly that the Thirty Club invitation deserved every support, have expressed their own sentiments on the point in these advertising pages. If anything were needed to show the depth of feeling that exists in the British Isles, surely these eloquent personal indorsements will be regarded as the most convincing evidence.

Great national journals, the London Times, the Daily Mail, the Daily Telegraph, the Daily Chronicle, the News of the World, the Daily News and the Star, the Sunday Times, the striking chain of publications from the house of E. Hulton & Co., Ltd., and John Bull are representative of the publishing interests of London that show ardent support of the movement, while Punch, master of the world's humor, stretches out its hand in genial welcome also.

Yorkshire, that mighty acreage of country England, voices its sentiment through the Yorkshire Post, the Yorkshire Evening News (whose publicity director, Sidney Walton, was associated with the great advertising exhibition of 1920) and the Leeds Advertising Service.

Ulster backs up London through the Belfast Telegraph, the Advertising Club of Ulster and two great Belfast advertisers, Robinson & Cleaver and Ross & Co., Ltd. The Irish Free State utters its message through the Irish Independent of Dublin, and the South of Ireland Newspapers, the fine Cork Examiner group.

Great London advertising agencies that have gone into the movement include the houses of W. S. Crawford, Ltd., Charles F. Higham, Ltd., Frederick E. Potter, Ltd., G. Street & Co., Ltd., Erwoods, Ltd., Steele's Advertising Service, the Merloo Publicity Service and Thomas Dixon's West-End Agency, while Birmingham has its representative in H. Cecil Taylor and Liverpool in Forbes, Kerr & Bullen.

An important note is struck by the British Association of Trade and Technical Journals which extends a special welcome, supported by the Model Engineer and the Hardwareman.

Of interest, too, is the fact that a great British advertiser with a hundred years or more of advertising history, Eno's Fruit Salt, is a suggestion of tonic support.

There is the Cunard Line, whose "Berengaria" will bring the delegates across, and two great railways, the London & Northeastern, and the Great Western, telling of many beauty spots outside London, with the Underground of London, also, to extend a welcome from the home of a great transport service.

All these are houses that take the big view, saying, in effect: "The Thirty Club of London is proposing a great idea; we indorse it."

MYTHICAL AD AGENCY

It Is Being Formed for Campaign to Boost Washington

A group of members of the Washington Advertising Club are forming a mythical advertising agency for one purpose, to launch a campaign to advertise Washington.

The plan will be submitted to a committee representing the business interests of Washington. The idea has put new life into the Washington Advertising Club.

JOHN BULL extends a hearty invitation to American advertising men to hold the 1924 A. A. C. W. Convention in London.

Most people, even in America, know a great deal about JOHN BULL and have followed it with interest, especially during the last year or so. With a strong editorial policy, backed by regular weekly articles from the pens of Arnold Bennett, A. G. Gardiner, Harold Owen, Professor Lowe, Revd. R. J. Campbell, Harrison Owen and many others equally well known, it has come right back to its previous popularity and has today a prestige which is greater than ever.

The latest certified net paid sales are:

Issue dated Mar. 3rd, 1923.....691,539
" " " 10th, 1923.....706,503
" " " 17th, " 713,377
" " "31st, "754,158

This popularity is due entirely to editorial excellence; JOHN BULL runs no "free coupon" or other fake circulation-inflating competitions. You can judge its value by comparison with your own "Post." You have one hundred and twenty million people to whom the "S. E. P." caters splendidly. JOHN BULL caters similarly and with equal success amongst a population of forty-four millions.

We don't take half-tone blocks but can produce fine lines excellently. JOHN BULL is printed on excellent news paper, goes to press each Friday and is published the Wednesday following.

Your advertising will win ever so much more quickly if it appears regularly in JOHN BULL.

The page rate is £200, (approximately $932).

Philip Emanuel, Advertisement Manager, of Odhams Press, Ltd. (the proprietors of JOHN BULL), will be at the 1923 Atlantic City Convention. Letters for him should be addressed to Pennsylvania Hotel, New York, or 57 Long Acre, London.

I am told that this edition of EDITOR & PUBLISHER will have a circulation of 10,000 copies among newspaper men mainly. For this reason I must regard the insertion of this mesage from a philanthropic point of view and gather that I cannot expect any tangible results for the British Advertising Agency which I represent. Well, I am going ahead with my eyes open, but if I cannot by this means appeal to any large number of advertisers, I at least have the satisfaction of knowing that I shall reach the eyes of some thousands of newspaper men—and I want to tell them all that whatever space they can give to further the case of helping the 1924 convention of the A. A. C. W. in London, will bring them a rich return from those of their readers who are able to take what I call the "long view." Assure them that we are worth knowing and that, even from a business point of view, they may, by personal contact with our business men and concerns, pick up a wrinkle or two which will fully justify the time and money expended in coming over here next year. Do not forget to emphasize this point: we are holding in 1924 the British Empire Trade Exhibition, and this will afford our friends from U. S. A. a fine opportunity of meeting business men from every part of the world where the Britisher is in the habit of pushing his wares. These men from overseas represent business opportunities which no one can afford to neglect, and your share of the orders they can place is not to be despised. I know, for I have been specialising in the advertising of British goods in overseas markets for over 25 years past.

This last remark is getting away from the philanthropic side of this message and perhaps the rest of what I have to say concerns the American advertisers reading EDITOR & PUBLISHER to a greater extent than it may do publishers of newspapers. Great Britain is a wonderful market, and its inhabitants respond to good advertising in a remarkable fashion. Of course, we have our peculiarities, and the psychology of the British man and woman can best be exploited by those who belong to the advertising profession in this country. This is one other reason why your business men should come to London next year, for they will then have an opportunity of talking with various British Agencies, and of realising for themselves the advantages and, indeed, the necessity, of securing their help in developing a demand in the British Isles for American products.

The Agency which I represent will only be too glad to help in this direction. Offering, as it does, a personal service to each of its clients there must be a limit to the number of new accounts it can accept—but all advertising business entrusted to us is given conscientious attention in every aspect of its requirements. We offer you that service now, for much valuable time can be saved by opening a preliminary discussion with us before you settle down to a close study as to what scope there is in Great Britain for your goods. Correspondence will be welcome and replied to without delay if addressed to

BRITISH DELEGATES' MESSAGES TO U. S.

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, from its London Editor.)

THE MEMBERS of the British delegation due at Atlantic City have furnished to EDITOR & PUBLISHER their expressions of opinion upon the subject of why the 1924 Ad Club convention should go to London. Here are advertisers and manufacturers, advertising agents, and newspaper men, and their views make interesting reading as showing the many points of view from which the matter may be approached.

It is only fair to add that there may be one or two unavoidable omissions, but it should be remembered that his edition has been edited over three thousand miles away, necessitating practically a three weeks' gap between last copy and publication.

FIRST—THE ADVERTISER

Coming to Learn

ERNEST T. WALKER, managing director of Wolsey, Ltd., Leicester, England, manufacturers of Wolsey Underwear:

I have been asked to give my views as to why the 1924 advertising convention is wanted for London. I would a good deal sooner do this after my visit to the convention in America.

I am going over to Atlantic City to learn. I believe that America has always been the pioneer of advertising, and that the American has far more advanced ideas as to the necessity and power of advertising as an aid to business than have English manufacturers. I believe, therefore, that if an advertising convention is held in London, it will do a great deal to stimulate Englishmen to the need of advertising in business. Englishmen today still look upon advertising as a luxury to indulge in if they can afford it, and not a necessity essential for the progress of their business.

Inspirational Conventions

PHILIP G. A. SMITH, manager of the advertising department of Shell-Mex, Ltd., distributors of Shell petrol:

The 1924 advertising convention should come to London, not only because Great Britain has much to learn from America, but also because America has something to learn from the old country. An interchange of experiences and ideas on so vast a subject as publicity cannot fail to prove of immeasurable value to the commerce of both countries.

The inspiration of these wonderful conventions is not confined to advertising men, but is equally helpful to principles and executives of all departments; and I have no doubt that, with British firms thus given the opportunity of placing a true valuation upon these institutions, we shall start in 1925 with an advertising convention of our own.

On Desiring a Convention

H. DENNIS BRADLEY, gentle cynic and gentleman's tailor of Old Bond street, London:

To experience a desire for anything excites a pleasant emotion. One's needs are easily attended to, they become part of the banal necessity of life; but one's desires are created by individual culture. For instance, my stomach does not really need caviar, though my palate desires it, and as a consequence, I now resent the crudity of Russian Bolshevism almost as much as I resent Rumanian caviar.

Before the end of the first act of many plays, my desire is to possess the power to stop the performance; but there is really no need for this unless one suffers from insomnia.

Other and more intimate desires, occasionally flicker on the horizon of my vision, but these remain focused in my mind and are carefully tended until ripe for capture. All of which illustrates my amazement that I could ever be appealed to by convention.

So, though I detest convention in its accepted sense; though I loathe conventionality in every form and am infuriated by the cloak of hypocrisy with which it is surrounded, yet my rebellious spirit succumbs, and I find myself actually desiring to attend a convention. But I do feel that it is "A far, far better convention I go to than any I have disregarded."

The prospect in front of me is thrilling: I do not know your country, but I feel I know your people. Many have been my friends on this small island, where even I, by my Irish blood, am half a foreigner.

Here, then, is a toast to our meeting, and may we be free and unconventional in our "convention" at Atlantic City. But let me warn you that so far as the infliction of Prohibition is concerned, you will find me a gentlemen of uneasy virtue.

Will Herald a New Dawn

E. HERBERT MORRIS, advertising manager of Lotus, Ltd., Stafford:

The advertising convention for 1924 will be of exceptional value to the commercial world. It will herald the dawn of a brighter epoch in the export trade. The movement towards a free, healthy and natural interchange of commodities throughout the whole world is growing, but at present it is comparatively weak. Next year export business will bulk large, and export advertising will be worth considering.

London is a good background for such a conference. All great cities are cosmopolitan, but London is probably the most cosmopolitan of them all. It is a great old mother of cities which has weathered two thousand years of storm and stress and has grown greater with every struggle.

The 1924 convention will be polyglot in speech, and may be highly variegated in creed, politics and even in color. But no matter how many languages may be spoken, London's welcoming smile will convey an invitation translatable into every tongue.

There are sound geographical and ethnical reasons for holding the convention in the capital of the British Empire. To begin with, the Union Jack floats over a remarkable medley of diverse races, and the ramifications of the great overseas sister states, crown colonies and dependencies represent, in the aggregate, interests of of world wide character and importance. Then, too, the political associations of London with other nationals are intimate and almost universal. London is a center and a clearing house both for money and ideas.

I look forward to the time when the business organization of the world will be on such a footing that it will be possible to arrange for a scientific exchange of services and commodities in accordance with the needs and the manufacturing facilities of each country. Waste, overlapping of effort, poverty and unemployment will then begin to diminish perceptibly.

It is certain that if any such Utopia of commercial prosperity and stability is ever to be reached—both London and the profession of advertising will have to take part in the program. The sooner they get together the better.

Information on British Merchandising

ARTHUR TAYLOR, advertising manager, Messrs. J. C. Eno, Ltd., manufacturers Eno's Fruit Salt Derivative Compound:

Messrs. Eno are enthusiastic supporters of the proposal that the 1924 convention should be held in London. There is nothing like visiting the other man in his home to find out just what sort of an individual he is. On this principle we feel that only good can result from our sending a strong force of our leading business men to England next year.

The event would provide excellent opportunities to get first hand information on British merchandising problems, and so prove directly helpful to manufacturers who contemplate entering or developing what is a profitable and compact market for many more American and Canadian products than are already firmly established there. Apart from this, which, after

Special Message to Editor & Publisher

I FEEL confident that if the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World decide to hold their 1924 Convention in London, they will receive the heartiest and most sincere welcome that could possibly be accorded to any visitors to these shores.

Also they will find much to learn whilst here.

Perhaps the difference in the outlook of the business man in America and in this country may be expressed as follows. If a firm here can put on their notepaper or over their doors "Established 1600 and fast asleep," they are proud of the fact, and it is, possibly, the basis of the goodwill of their customers and of immense value.

On the other hand, if a firm commence in the United States and can say that they were founded last week, and are going to do business next week on the possibilities of the week after, that will prove a basis of infinitely more valuable goodwill than any amount of wrinkled old age can bring.

For myself, I have for years adopted the policy of bringing the directors and managers of our various businesses in the United States at frequent intervals to visit this country, and, equally my colleagues and myself, and our directors and managers in the United Kingdom make frequent visits to the United States.

I feel we are all the stronger, each of us, for these exchanges of ideas. The effect is to give the strength and settled foundations of business of the older country to the force and progress and youthful vitality of the younger country.

Perhaps I may also say that the heartiness of our welcome to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World is founded upon the well-known basis of gratitude—a lively sense of favours to come.

Whatever our visitors may be able to learn from us on general business lines will be generously and amply repaid by what they will teach us in the world of advertising. There is an educational policy behind all American advertising which is quite distinct from the purely "pretty picture" policy which is behind so much English advertising.

all, is chiefly a matter of individual interest, there is the much broader aspect to be considered, that of the further bonding together of the two nations through the face-to-face interchange of thought and ideas.

Successful advertisers and advertising men are broad-gauged. Otherwise, success would not be theirs. It is this type that would foregather at the convention in London, and the impressions gained would inevitably react favorably on public opinion on both sides of the Atlantic.

Another Scot Says Come

FRED SHOESMITH, managing director Fairy Dyes, Ltd., Glasgow:

I believe that the support of the advertising convention for London in 1924 is one of the best business moves advertising men could possibly make. We owe much to America for her enterprise in advertising and the bringing together of many men with different viewpoints, and the focusing attention on advertising as a real commercial asset, will prove invaluable, not to the advertising fraternity alone, but to commercial firms whose success is achieved by virtue of advertising.

Any manufacturer by virtue of careful thought and sufficient business knowledge can create a new article, but it is only by good advertising that it can be got on to the market, hold its place, and achieve lasting success.

Most manufacturers are interested in advertising, most business men realize its place today, and for that reason, I think the 1924 convention here will appeal to a very wide circle. As a manufacturer, not an advertising man, it has my heartfelt wishes for its success.

Convention Good for Both

THOMAS WALLEY, joint manager of Cochran & Co., Ltd., Annan, Scotland, makers of multitube boilers:

Sound education is the need of the day. Advertising rightly done, is education pure and simple. It instructs the masses where and how to purchase the world's best commodities with little outlay, just as the parent birds teach their young to feed and fly. British manufacturers generally have yet to realize that this definition of advertising is quite accurate. The holding of a world convention in London with its attendant influx of keen and competent publicity men from other countries would inevitably compel consideration of the question, with the result that even the most old-fashioned firm might realize the cardinal principle, if you know of something which it is good your fellow-men to have, it is your DUTY to put them in the way of getting it. Our press has something to learn too, especially in the way of technique, and the general public need it. For such conventions are fatal to the catchpenny and fraudulent advertiser.

Nor would the gain be all on our side. In the vast activities of entrepot London, our friends from protectionist countries could see how enormously free trade helps the advertiser, a valuable lesson; they would learn at first hand something of both native and alien trading psychology, no negligible asset in advertising; and the friendly interchange of ideas made possible by their visit would be a contribution to international harmony, which would serve as an illustration of a method of achieving the desirable objects of the League of Nations without employing its cumbrous and creaking machinery.

Finally, we, the present delegation, know we shall run up against a lot of good fellows on our trip this year, and we would value the opportunity of "standing them a soft drink (maybe) in our own house" next year.

One Can Only Receive by Giving

E. D. GIRARDOT, chairman and managing director of St. George Carriers, Ltd., automobile experts:

The business men of Great Britain feel that gathering the Selling Brains of the world here, will give a better opportunity of selling each other what we want, and what we have to sell.

We look upon the American advertisers in the aggregate, as knowing all there is to know about ADVERTISING AND SELLING, and we want to learn from them.

If there is anything that American business men think we know, which they think they do not know, we are quite willing to do all we can to tell them all we know, on the assumption that one can only receive by giving.

America and Great Britain must co-operate in solving present world difficulties, and after all, it is the Advertising Experts who are the voice of BUSINESS and who are going to be probably the greatest factor in re-establishing normal conditions. So, we are emphatic that nothing but great good can come by holding the 1924 Advertising Convention in London. IT WILL BE WORTH YOUR WHILE!

Looking for Ideas

A. G. ROSSITER, managing director, Rego Clothiers, Ltd., London:

When an invitation to attend the 1924 advertising convention was first brought to my notice I did not hesitate to accept because I felt that such a convention should prove of great value to all concerned.

Publicity is undoubtedly a paying proposition particularly if one can succeed in being original, and it is the problem of continually finding something fresh to tell the public that occupies so much valuable time today. A combination of original suggestions and ideas must necessarily prove far more comprehensive than those of one or two individuals, and it is for this reason alone, apart from the many obvious advantages of studying American methods of publicity and of fraternizing with fellow business men, that I feel the 1924 advertising convention should succeed in stimulating trade in no small degree.

NEXT—THE NEWSPAPERS

What A. A. C. W. Can Achieve at London

LIEUT. COL. FREDERICK LAWSON (London Daily Telegraph), representing the Newspaper Proprietors Association:

Conventions of this nature are of infinite value for the promotion of international trade and the creation of international good feeling. We have much to learn from America about the science of efficient and successful advertising. In return we can give the benefit of our own experience, we can bring American advertising men into touch with the great business organizations of Great Britain, and can give them an opportunity of studying on the spot the problems of reconstruction which confront Europe.

The A. A. C. W. is an international organization, and if they decide to meet in London, they will show that they realize the importance to every country of stimulating international trade. Business men here, whilst appreciating these considerations, will also welcome the convention here in 1924 for private and personal reasons. They will be glad of an opportunity of giving some return for the wonderful hospitality which has been offered in the United States to themselves or their representatives in the past.

Stimulate U. K. and U. S. Advertising

HORACE S. IMBER, advertisement director, London Daily Mail and Associated Newspapers, confesses a keen appreciation of the vigor and originality of American advertising methods.

He states that an exchange of ideas in matters relating to publicity cannot fail to stimulate English advertising in America and American advertising in England. It may well be, too, that visitors to London in 1924 will discover for themselves the interesting fact it is less expense to cover the British market than it is to exploit their own great country.

He believes also, that the proceedings of such a conference held in London, will be closely followed by thousands of English business men who should advertise largely but have been prevented from attending the conferences in America.

The newspapers with which Mr. Imber is connected have already strongly advocated—and will continue to support with all their power—the "on to London" program, regarding it as a movement that will tighten the bonds between England and America and at the same time operate to the mutual prosperity of the two great English-speaking nations.

See Britain's Condensed Problems

PHILIP EMANUEL, advertisement manager, Odhams Press, Ltd., and treasurer, Thirty Club of London:

Whilst we realize that we have a great deal which we can learn from you we feel that a journey to London in 1924 must benefit every American who takes it.

We doff our hats in respect for the dignity and standing which advertising has acquired in America but we feel that these qualities and that of forcefulness will be enhanced by what we can tell you and show you here in London. Nothing so broadens a man as travel and there is no country which has greater charm or dig-

Thousands of pounds—thousands of dollars—have been awarded to readers by "The Star" in connection with its regular monthly shopping competitions for purchases made from "Star" advertisers. Advertisements in "The Star" are read and responded to. This fact accounts for the remarkable increase in the advertisements which this paper carries and indicates why every American advertiser appealing to the English market cannot afford to omit "The Star" from his list. Eno says:

"Come to London in 1924"

AS manufacturers of an English product which is extensively advertised and widely appreciated by many scores of thousands in the Americas, we endorse the idea of the A.A.C.W. Convention coming to London in 1924. If England's invitation be accepted, we can assure prospective visitors that they will have no cause to regret their choice of a Convention City.

TO American and Canadian manufacturers and advertising men who view the British Isles as a likely market for products in which they are interested, the 1924 Convention in London will provide opportunities otherwise unattainable for an on-the-spot study of conditions.

From a fifty years' experience of selling Eno's "Fruit Salt" in every quarter of the globe, we realize that only by direct contact with a people can we properly learn the best way to develop sales among them. Methods that succeed in the Argentine are unavailing in China—the appeal that loosens the purse-strings of the Turk may leave the Mexican cold and unresponsive.

So we say to you: Let your vote at Atlantic City be "London for 1924," and then come over a thousand strong.

nity than Britain. The mere sight of it will be an inspiration, but here you have in a small country with a large population all those problems condensed which you have in America. We handle them in our own way—perhaps that is not your way, but you will learn much from our experiences just as we know that we will reap a great deal of benefit from what you are going to tell us.

There are many departments of advertising in which you excel us greatly but there are sections of publicity and selling of which we believe we have special knowledge. Especially does this apply to the business of exporting.

In this connection the British Empire Exhibition will itself repay you for the time and expense you will incur, but we feel that the program we shall put before you will be so varied that my assumption that the 1924 London convention is already certain is really merely a tribute to your discrimination.

The Ideal of Anglo-American Friendship

EWAN S. AGNEW, a director of Bradbury, Agnew & Co., Ltd., proprietors of Punch:

I think the 1924 advertising convention is wanted for London not only because it will give a great stimulus to all trade and business circles in England, and particularly, of course, to the world of advertising in which newspapers must always be vitally interested, but also because, in my opinion, any such gathering, including, as it does, an exchange in points of view, and a wide measure of hospitality, will not only materially benefit the newspapers of the two countries but will be of the greatest possible assistance to the big ideal of Anglo-American friendship, on which, perhaps, the peace, and therefore the whole future of the civilized world depend.

I hope that the "On-to-London" movement will be an unqualified and lasting success, and I can assure those delegates who come over to attend it that they will be met with the friendly warmth of an English welcome.

Stimulant to World Trade

W. RAYMOND DERWENT, general manager, Nottingham Journal:

The coming of the convention to London would mark a new era in British advertising. Coinciding as it would with the British Empire exhibition which is to be held at Wembley in 1924, the convention would bring the advertising men of America and Britain in touch with business men from all parts of the British Empire. This could not help but be a stimulant to trade and commerce the world over, as it would focus attention on the importance of the selling end as well as the manufacturing end of all businesses.

The holding of the convention in London would cement the friendship between the two great English-speaking countries which is the most vital necessity of international politics today.

It is not too much to say that the peace of the world really depends upon Anglo-American friendship. We must first get acquainted; from acquaintance will spring friendship, from friendship—trust and confidence.

Make Advertising International

ULRIC B. WALMSLEY (Daily Sketch) representing Messrs. E. Hulton & Co., Ltd., London and Manchester:

Advertising having demonstrated its parochial power can prove its international prestige. If the advertising convention is held in London in 1924 it will not only live up to its international title, but do more to cement national friendships and create bigger business than any political move.

I believe that a lot of good fellows coming over in England for heart-to-heart talks would build bigger and better business upon the foundation of personal friendships. There's a lot we can exchange with each other as good pals anxious to teach and to learn.

Each Visitor a Missionary

W. T. WALLACE, managing director, National Trade Press, Ltd., London:

I think the convention should be held here in 1924 because I believe that we have a great deal to learn from America about advertising and I feel certain that many British manufacturers will have their ideas of the relation of advertising to selling revolutionized. The Empire exhibition will, I am certain, give our American visitors a more comprehensive idea of what the British Empire really means and it will make every one of our visitors a missionary in his country for closer relations, both commercial and otherwise between the United States and the British Empire. As the Empire is far and away the largest customer for American goods the knowledge gained by such a visit would surely be an advantage to our visitors.

Misunderstandings Cleared Away

W. T. DAY, London representative of Pioneer Press of India:

The 1924 convention, if held in London, will, I believe, cultivate and strengthen goodwill between America and England. Goodwill is a plant of slower growth than hatred, suspicion, distrust or prejudice. It is less prolific than any of these, nor can it flourish where they abound. But it bears better fruit.

America as a nation is, in my humble opinion, misunderstood by a proportion of the population over here, and the same remarks apply I think to England in America.

The convention is wanted in London to dispel the erroneous notion that America is a country of "dollars dealers" or that England is out "colony chasing." An international discussion between two great English-speaking nations on advertising and selling is sure to be of mutual benefit.

LORD ASHFIELD BELIEVES IN INTERCHANGE OF VISITS

I HOPE that the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at their Annual Convention in June, at Atlantic City, will decide to hold the 1924 Convention in London. I am certain that their visit to England will do incalculable good, as I am a firm believer in these visits.

In pursuance of this belief I make a point of sending a party of my officers over to the United States every year. This year four representatives from Electric Railway House, who are now on their way to the States, will make a point of attending the Atlantic City Convention.

I need hardly add that, should the 1924 Convention be held in London, the Delegates will be assured of a very warm welcome from London, and we shall unite in making the visit one of useful purpose and happy memory.

ASHFIELD.

Would See British Backbone

FREDERICK JOHNSON, London representative of four Liverpool newspapers:

To my mind the effect of the advertising convention being held in London, in 1924, will be the advancement of publicity in all forms to a point never reached before. The meeting of men from progressive America with men of the older country who work perhaps on more traditional lines, the friendly exchange of ideas and the possible co-ordination of systems must tend to place advertising on a more solid and scientific basis. It will also give American business and advertising men an opportunity of visiting our great industrial centers and seeing for themselves the potential possibilities of business and advertising in Great Britain, and I feel convinced they will return to America in the full knowledge that there is still plenty of resource, ability and backbone in the old country.

FINALLY—THE AGENCY

President-Elect on Questions for Study

C. HAROLD VERNON, Honorary Secretary, Thirty Club of London, and President-elect for 1924:

A convention in London such as is contemplated will not only bring American and English manufacturers and buyers into personal contact, but delegates will be invited to attend from all European countries, Australasia, South Africa, India, China and Japan.

One of the problems to be dealt with at the convention would be the working out of a code for the protection of national and international trade marks and patents, a matter which has caused manufacturers in all parts of the world considerable trouble and inconvenience for many, many years.

Many markets have been closed to traders by reason of the complicated condition of the patent laws and proceedings in operation in different countries.

The problems of distribution, as affected by local conditions in different parts of the world, would also be considered, and useful information would be exchanged on this important subject.

The questions of store advertising, multiple shop advertising, and advertising by trade organizations are other subjects on which information could be exchanged with great benefit to both countries.

These and many other problems of a similar character would form part of the 1924 convention.

A proper appreciation by each country of the relative taxation which its citizens are called upon to pay will do much to explain the difference in spending power in the various countries represented at the convention. The need of one country to purchase goods manufactured by another will be brought to the fore, which should result in a stimulus which will quickly be appreciated by the manufacturers of the articles in which each country specializes.

London is "The Place"

FREDERICK E. POTTER, of the Fredk. E. Potter, Ltd., Agency:

First and foremost the advertising convention for London, 1924, will mean increased friendship between the United States and ourselves. This I believe to be one of the greatest and most urgent necessities of the moment, not merely for our own mutual good, but for the world's peace and general welfare. If there were no other reason, this should be an all-sufficient one. Our American friends like big things, and London is the biggest thing in creation in cities.

Then the meeting together of the leading specialists in publicity matters will be an inestimable advantage from a business point of view. Advertising men from America will find there is something to be learned even here; they may be surprized to find what tremendous progress has been made in advertising matters during the past twenty years on this side of the Atlantic.

While it will mean a long journey for many delegates, it will prove worth while for all who have not visited the British Isles. There are innumerable attractions, historical, architectural, commercial, and so on. Some of us are travelling to the States this year for the Atlantic City convention. It shows we ourselves believe profoundly in the travel, trouble, and expense which we are advocating for others.

Not only does Great Britain offer a wonderful market for many American products, but all visitors will find our arms wide open to welcome, to entertain, to please and, if possible to profit them. It will provide an opportunity also for a visit to the continent of Europe. For these and other reasons we say "Come over and take counsel with us, as united we can lead the world commercially, and above all, for the higher civiiization and the world's peace."

Better Understanding

ERIC FIELD, director of Erwoods, Ltd., International Advertising Agents of London:

Were it only for the better understanding of each other that must follow better acquaintance, the 1924 convention would be worth holding in London, for better understanding means smoother international relations and less political bickering.

But to us advertising men, American and British alike, the immediate benefits cannot fail to be immense. Every American advertising man will learn more of the great European market. He will discover how little different are British habits, how tremendous are the opportunities waiting in Europe for many kinds of American goods and how readily the British public responds to advertising conceived by those with a real knowledge of its temperament.

Come—Look—And Learn

LIONEL D. FALK, managing director, D. J. Keymer & Co., Ltd., London:

I am strongly of the opinion that the 1924 Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World should be held in London for the following reasons:

First, because it would enable our American visitors (1) to secure a first hand knowledge of the British market and marketing conditions.;

(2) To examine and discuss the sales and advertising methods by which this market can best be entered.

(3) Because there are several phases of advertising which American advertising men can learn from their British confrères.

(4) They will come into personal contact

HOUSE of HULTON

WE extend hearty greetings to all those delegates who purpose visiting these shores and cordially invite them to avail themselves of the opportunity to investigate at first hand the resources of the House of Hulton as a means to the successful marketing of their products in Great Britain. Not only will the gigantic output of Big Circulation Newspapers astonish, but the tabulated evidence of the pulling-power of the Hulton Group for American and English products will prove conclusively that "Hulton's" gets to the heart of the people.

On the page facing are given just a few facts for the advertiser who contemplates making a bid for the support of the British public who, although they may be insular, have no prejudice. We want you to come—we are putting up 25,000 dollars to help to give you a good time if you do.

E. HULTON & CO., Ltd.
London and Manchester

The HULTON GROUP

The Greatest and Most Wonderful Aggregation of Newspapers in Great Britain

THE British Isles present a phase of advertising not known in America. They are the home of intensive advertising—much more intensive than that conceived by Kennedy.

Here you have a population of nearly 44 million people—all kings and queens of their own domain—all being influenced by advertising in all that they spend. These 44 millions are packed inside an area of 121,000 square miles—a very little larger than your State of Colorado.

Thus you will realize how intensive must be the advertising in this country of ours—how intensive must be the circulation of the papers carrying the advertising.

If you picture the British Isles as a human body with Hulton's Organization functioning as the heart you have a parallel to the circulation of Hulton's publications. Every city, town, village and hamlet is roped in.

Visualizing the Hulton Group thus you will understand the meaning of the statement when it is said that "you can cover the country with the Hulton Group."

The total sale per week of every issue of every paper, reaches the enormous figure of

SEVENTEEN MILLIONS

How these gigantic sales are achieved is explained by the following:—Hulton's is the largest firm of newspaper publishers in the United Kingdom, has the largest installation of linotypes, the largest machine room equipment, and the largest newspaper store, etc. It possesses the two largest newspaper offices and plants in the Country—at London and at Manchester.

Here are facts that will help you

HERE are facts that will help you to grasp the magnitude of the Hulton enterprises:—Three Sunday newspapers (one of which is a picture-paper as absorbing in interest to the women folk as the Ladies' Home Journal), having a Sunday Morning sale of 3,200,491; a morning picture paper selling nearly a million; a morning newspaper, nearly half-a-million; two evening newspapers, one nearly half-a-million—the other over three hundred and fifty thousand; a sporting daily paper with one hundred thousand; a weekly news picture paper over two hundred and forty thousand; a weekly athletic newspaper (the only one in the Kingdom) with a hundred and fifty thousand; five weekly story and home journals each selling nearly two hundred thousand. The total sale per week of every issue of every paper reaches the tremendous figure of seventeen millions and twenty-one thousand. The whole of Great Britain is the Hulton constituency. The thorough covering of every territory is an accomplished fact, and no other group of papers has such a range of appeal.

Rich Areas for Intensive Advertising

FOR intensive campaign in the Kingdom's most fertile areas, Hulton's service to advertisers is unparalleled in British newspaper circles. Hulton Publications can carry your message into every corner of the United Kingdom. They can give you doubly re-inforced publicity in the London and Lancashire area.

Each area contains 10,000,000 people. Almost half the population of the United Kingdom is concentrated in these two areas. Geographically, Commercially and Industrially the London and Lancashire areas are the bedrocks of Britain's strength.

In each area, Hulton's has groups of papers providing the greatest amount of publicity at a lower rate per thousand than any other combination of local papers.

This is the famous with representatives of British business men and thereby gain a first-hand knowledge of their mentality and outlook on life which must strengthen the friendly relationship between the two peoples.

From the British point of view, the holding of the convention in London will enable British advertising men (1) to learn the latest advertising methods and developments of the United States.

(2) To learn of the opportunities for British goods in the United States and the best ways of marketing those goods.

(3) The convention would enhance the reputation which British manufactures have already obtained in the United States by showing our visitors how and where these goods are manufactured, and

(4) It would drive home to the British business community the power of advertising to promote sales by means of the wide publicity given to the convention and to the advertising matters discussed at the convention in the press of this country.

Isn't the Time Ripe?

ANDREW MILNE, appointed organizer by the Thirty Club of London, for the 1924 Convention in London:

In accepting the invitation of the Thirty Club to come to London in 1924, the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World have the one big opportunity of making their great movement for better Advertising and Selling, a crusade of world-wide dimensions. That is the best reason for London in 1924 as I see it.

Most of us on this side who study better methods in advertising know quite well what the associated clubs have done in America and Canada. We also know what has got to be done in Europe, and we fully realize how the London convention will sow the seed of better relations, not only between our two countries, but throughout the entire World of Commerce.

The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, despite their title, have so far only confined their activities to the States and Canada. So far so good, but isn't the time ripe for a bigger—much bigger— movement? I imagine the Thirty Club had this in mind when their invitation was extended.

This country has many advertising, selling and manufacturers' associations, clubs and societies, each working along their respective lines, each reaping the benefit of closer co-operation. The London convention of 1924 is going to bring all these organizations together under the one roof for discussion, exchanging of ideas with similar organizations from the States and Canada. Not only so, but the whole of business Europe will be represented at this great London convention.

What an ideal for the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to set themselves. What a wonderful opportunity for the associated clubs' great work to be carried on to virgin soil, where the whole business of advertising and selling stands waiting to cultivate the seed which will mean so much to the trade relations of the two hemispheres.

On to London, then, in 1924.

London's Big Year

FLEETWOOD PRITCHARD, of Advertising & Publicity, Ltd., London:

I want to see the 1924 convention in London, because I believe it will do more than anything that has ever happened to increase the confidence of the public in advertising. Say what you will, advertising is not at present generally recognized as rendering a service to the man in the street.

1924 is to be London's big year. At a time when the attention of the world will be focussed on the opening of the British Empire Exhibition, a meeting of advertising experts, which is absolutely international in character, will throw the limelight on to a side of advertising with which the public is quite unfamiliar.

I believe that the 1924 convention will provide advertising men with a means of convincing the public that efficient advertising is an economical means of selling, which by necessitating the maintenance of quality benefits the consumer as definitely and positively as efficient production.

"See How We Run London"

THOMAS McDOUGALL, of Kingsway, London:

Of course, the 1924 convention should be held in London. It is always a matter of wonder to me that while British advertising men and manufacturers think that a visit to America is necessary to round off their education, the American cannot judge his home course to be sufficient. Let us get Americans here. We've got something too to teach them. Show them that they've as much to learn from us as we have from them. Let them see us at home and I'm certain that their impressions of the nation that can run London will not be to the disadvantage of Britain.

Impetus to Business

ARTHUR CHADWICK, chairman and managing director Amalgamated Publicity Services, Ltd., London:

The convention is wanted in London to give an impetus to business by the exchange of views, ideas and methods between the leading advertising men on "both sides."

It is wanted in London because—as the "hub of the universe"—the doings and decisions of London will have a far reaching beneficial effect on trading conditions right throughout the universe.

It is wanted in London because the Associated Advertising Associations of the World cannot claim their title to the fullest extent until they have met here; hitherto their conventions have always been held in America.

WILLIAM E. BERRY, PRESIDENT OF ALDWYCH CLUB, SURE OF BENEFICENT RESULTS

I CERTAINLY hope that the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World will accept the invitation to hold their 1924 Convention in London.

Such a convention bringing together, as it would, the greatest minds and interests in advertising, would undoubtedly prove to be of incalculable and mutual advantage, particularly so to American and British advertisers.

Quite apart from the lessons to be learned and the new ideas which can be assimilated as a result of personal contact between the protagonists of the great business of advertising on either side of the Atlantic, any project which is calculated to deepen the understanding, in business or out of it, between our American friends and ourselves, has my sincere support.

We on this side would derive no uncertain benefit from the invigorating influence of American ideas, and I am sure, too, that the advertising interests in U. S. A. would find the experience of a visit to London of no less value.

WILLIAM E. BERRY.

PUBLICITY FOR PENNA. UTILITIES

J. S. S. Richardson, Former Newspaper Man, Directs New Bureau

Public utility corporations of Pennsylvania have organized the Pennsylvania Public Service Information Committee, with P. H. Gadsden, vice-president of the United Gas Improvement Company, Philadelphia, as chairman and Major J. S. S. Richardson as director. James M. Bennett, publicity manager of the United Gas Improvement Company, is secretary. Major Richardson was until recently city editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger and was for ten years on the New York Herald staff.

In a statement attributed to Mr. Gadsden, the committee is described as "in fact, a State bureau created to supply to the public, through the press and otherwise, accurate information concerning the public utilities of Pennsylvania, with a view of crystallizing sound public opinion and a feeling on the part of the public which will promote clear understanding of public utilities." Headquarters are at 930 City Centre Building, Philadelphia.

FORTNIGHT OF FROLIC FOR BRITISH GUESTS

Monster Banquet on June 1 in New York Precedes Convention, Which Will Be Followed by Tour of Eastern U. S.

Plans for entertainment of the British delegation to the Atlantic City convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World have been developed by the National Reception Committee so that the hundred or more who cross the ocean will have few idle moments from June 1, when they land in New York, until June 16 when they again turn their faces east.

Following a meeting of the committee on May 16, it made public its program as follows:

The committee, escorted by the Police Band, will be on board the municipal boat John F. Hylan, which will meet the Berengaria at Quarantine early on the morning of June 1. The British delegation will be permitted to debark at Quarantine, with baggage, and will proceed on the Hylan to the Battery. There the Advertising Men's Post of the American Legion will meet them and escort them in automobiles to the City Hall, where Mayor Hylan will extend the city's greetings.

That evening the delegation will be guests of honor at a banquet tendered by the reception committee at the Hotel Pennsylvania, attended by representatives of all the city's advertising interests. Herbert S. Houston, past president of the A. A. C. W. and chairman of the National Reception Committee, will preside and F. A. Wilson-Lawrenson will act as toastmaster. Speakers scheduled are John W. Davis, former Ambassador at the Court of St. James's, who will propose a toast to "The King"; President Lou E. Holland of the A. A. C. W.; Julius Barnes, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce; John Cheshire, president of the Thirty Club of London and head of the British delegation; and C. Harold Vernon, president-elect of the Thirty Club.

Saturday, June 2, will find the visitors on a tour of the city, including a river trip around Manhattan Island and several other features which the committee has not yet announced. An evening at the Ziegfeld Follies will top off the day.

Sunday morning at 8 o'clock the delegation will start for Atlantic City, arriving at 11 o'clock in time for the opening inspirational meeting. Convention activities will occupy their time until adjournment on June 7.

June 8, Friday, the Poor Richard Club will be hosts in Philadelphia.

Washington will entertain the British party on June 9, the hosts being the Washington Advertising Club, the National Press Club and the Gridiron Club.

June 10, Sunday, will be spent at Niagara Falls, following which the visitors will go to Toronto for a day on Canadian soil.

Buffalo will put its best foot foremost on June 12, on the evening of which the delegates will start for New York City, where they will again arrive June 13.

An international golf tournament at the Westchester-Biltmore Country Club near the city has been arranged for June 14.

On June 15, the New York Council of the American Association of Advertising Agencies will entertain the agents in the British group and the New York Business Publishers' Association will take care of their colleagues from across the ocean.

Saturday, June 16, is the date on which the British forces leave for home.

Transportation arrangements for the tour are in charge of A. E. MacKinnon, while financial matters have been handled by George H. Dunkle. Russell R. Whitman of the New York Commercial is chairman of the speakers' committee, other members of which are Gilbert T. Hodges, F. A. Wilson-Lawrenson, O. C. Harn and James Wright Brown.

At the May 16 meeting of the reception committee, Mr. MacKinnon, Mr. Dunkle and Jesse H. Neal, secretary-treasurer of the committee, reported on business arrangements. H. Rea Fitch, special commissioner of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, who has just returned from eight weeks in the British Isles, told the committee of his impressions of British advertising men, making special reference to the spirit in which the Thirty Club was attacking its task of securing the 1924 convention of the A. A. C. W. for London.

DR. FARNELL CLIMBS DOWN.

Ban on Oxford's New Theatre Removed.

ON CONDITIONS.

The Vice-Chancellor of Oxford University, Dr. Farnell, has removed his ban on the New Oxford Playhouse.

He had refused to allow [illegible] graduates to take part in the performances, that those concerned in the management of the theatre make a new application to me in the Long Vacation, or to the next Vice-Chancellor for consent to the license to have force throughout the rest of the current year.

This will allow you to open your theatre with your repertoire at the date which you had arranged.

NEW APPLICATION.

But it will still be necessary for me to license each particular play.

If your new application comes to me early in September I shall then be able to share with the future Vice-Chancellor the responsibility of deciding for the rest of your period.

Had the arrangements for this project been originally conducted with more knowledge of the Act of Parliament governing theatres in Oxford, less friction and less inconvenience would have ensued.

Dr. Farnell, it will be recalled, consented of the fact that, as a magistrate, he should have been consulted on the initial licensing of a new theatre.

Every play performed in Oxford, he decided, had to be licensed by the Vice-Chancellor of the University.

Late Lord Shrewsbury's Signature Mystery.

£25,000 GUARANTEE.

That the late Earl of Shrewsbury and Sir Henry Busby Bird signed a £25,000 guarantee without knowing the fact was the defence in an unusual High Court case yesterday.

An action was brought by the London Joint City and Midland Bank, Limited, against the executors of the late earl, Sir Henry Busby Bird and Mr. James Gibson, of Lucy-street, Stretford-road, Manchester, claiming £25,000 alleged to be due to the bank from the Aniline Dye and Chemical Company, Limited.

SPECIMEN SIGNATURES.

Mr. Stuart Bevan, K.C., for the plaintiffs, said the main defence was that signatories were misled into signing the fraudulent misrepresentations of Gibson.

When Mr. Gibson put it before them, it was alleged, he concealed the fact that it was a guarantee, and told them that it was a mere specimen signature which the bank required in order to obtain specimen signatures of Lord [illegible] and Sir Henry Bird, who had joined the board of the Aniline and Chemical Company. Lord Shrewsbury and Sir Henry had previously signed specimen signatures for the bank.

Alice Maud Mary Robinson, formerly secretary to the Aniline Dye Company, said the minutes of the meeting, at which she was not present, of October 21, 1920, recording that the guarantee had been signed by the directors, she wrote on instructions given to her by Mr. Gibson.

WIDENING THE TUBE.

For hours yesterday morning workmen were engaged in shovelling tons of ballast and rubble into a small hole in the roadway which, it was stated, was about 30 feet deep, and stretched for several yards each way beneath the concrete bed.

Widening and reconstruction of the tube is now in progress, and at the spot where the subsidence occurred a crossover from one line to the other is being made.

This necessitates an extra width of tunnel, and it was while boring to obtain the required aperture that a water "pocket" was struck by the engineers.

It is believed that the water is part of the Effra, an underground stream which after flowing from Brixton Hill, turns off at this point towards the Thames.

The accident was unfortunate because of the rush of people to see the Royal wedding.

At the three stations which have been closed by the mishap—Stockwell, Clapham-road, and Clapham Common—small crowds gathered, but a notice informed them that the tunnel was flooded and that trains were not running beyond Kennington Oval.

EMERGENCY BUS SERVICE.

Additional buses were rushed to the spot by the Underground controllers, and there was little delay in the journey to the City.

Extra buses will continue to run until this section of the line is opened.

In the meantime a three-minute service of trains will run between Moorgate and the Elephant and Castle, and a ten-minute service between the Elephant and the Oval.

It is expected that the train service over the full route to Clapham Common will be resumed shortly.

The normal tram service was restored shortly after 8 o'clock last night.

LONDON—THE WONDER CITY—LURES VISITORS

The City, One Square Mile; Royal Westminster and 27 Boroughs Make Up the Capital of the Empire; Great Transit System Is of Especial Interest.

F THE 1924 CONVENTION of the Associated Advertising Clubs f the World is held in London, American dvertising men who decide to make the ourney to the British capital may look orward with assurance to a convention hat will be enhanced by the sights and cenes of an environment such as only ondon can present. No other choice of enue could be happier or more propitiis, for in 1924 the attractions of Lonon will be augmented by the British mpire Exposition, the largest and most nportant exposition yet organized in reat Britain.

London—capital of the British Emire; the center of a world-wide trade nd commerce, with their concomitant of ublicity; and not only the cradle of nglish history, but, in a measure, the radle of American history as well. And, hrough a common language, the multiious feautres of interest in London are most as clearly envisaged to Americns as they are to Englishmen.

Here is a close-up of some of the enes and features of the historic capil:

ONDON CITY is the central square mile once occupied by the alled city and its suburbs. It is Lonon proper, within yet aloof from the st of the vast settlement, and under the ntrol of the Lord Mayor and the Corration. Save the General Postoffice, ere is not a State building within its ecincts, yet the city is the pulse of the ritish Empire. It developed by itself—free city.

It has long since ceased to be a dwellg place—it is thronged by countless ousands by day and is deserted at night. lmost the whole of this area, which is inged by the ancient wharves of the ver, is covered by financial and commeral offices, with which are commingled uildhall, the Man-on House, the oyal Exchange, the ock Exchange, the ld Bailey, St. ul's Cathedral, and ty or so parish urches that have rvived the changes time. Most of ese churches are lautiful edifices, ith towers and eples that glisten nite in the sun, and ost of them have storical associaons.

Some there are at tell of the old olonial days, among em the venerable . Ethelburga, herein Hudson and screw attended mmunion ere sailg for the Northst; and St. Sepulre, in which lies ried Capt. John nith, Governor of e Virginia Colony (was he that Pocaontas saved), and ere Roger Wilms, founder of hode Island, was ptized.

ROYAL WESTMINSTER is in rality the capital y of England. It the seat of the gislature, the urts of Justice, and the Government offices. In Westminster, too, are the royal palaces, the State museums and galleries, the chief parks, the great missions, the clubs, the theatres and concert halls, the principal hotels and restaurants and the important shopping thoroughfares.

Go back a thousand years and one can visualize the walled city of London and in the fields to the West the solitary monastery—the Westminster—and palace that became the cradle of the national history of England. Today the monastery is the shrine of the English race, the palace the capitol of an empire.

Apart from its associations, Westminster Abbey is one of the finest examples of a pre-Reformation Abbey in Britain, as the cloisters and other considerable portions of the old conventual buildings have been preserved. Visitors should therefore make a point of seeing the whole of the Abbey and not of merely confining their itinerary to the Abbey church. Beside the Abbey stands the parish church of St. Margaret, wherein lies the dust of Sir Walter Raleigh.

The magnificent new Palace of Westminster (such is the correct title of the British Houses of Parliament), the most splendid building erected in any city in modern times, is open on certain days for public inspection, while permission to be present at debates in the House of Commons can be readily obtained.

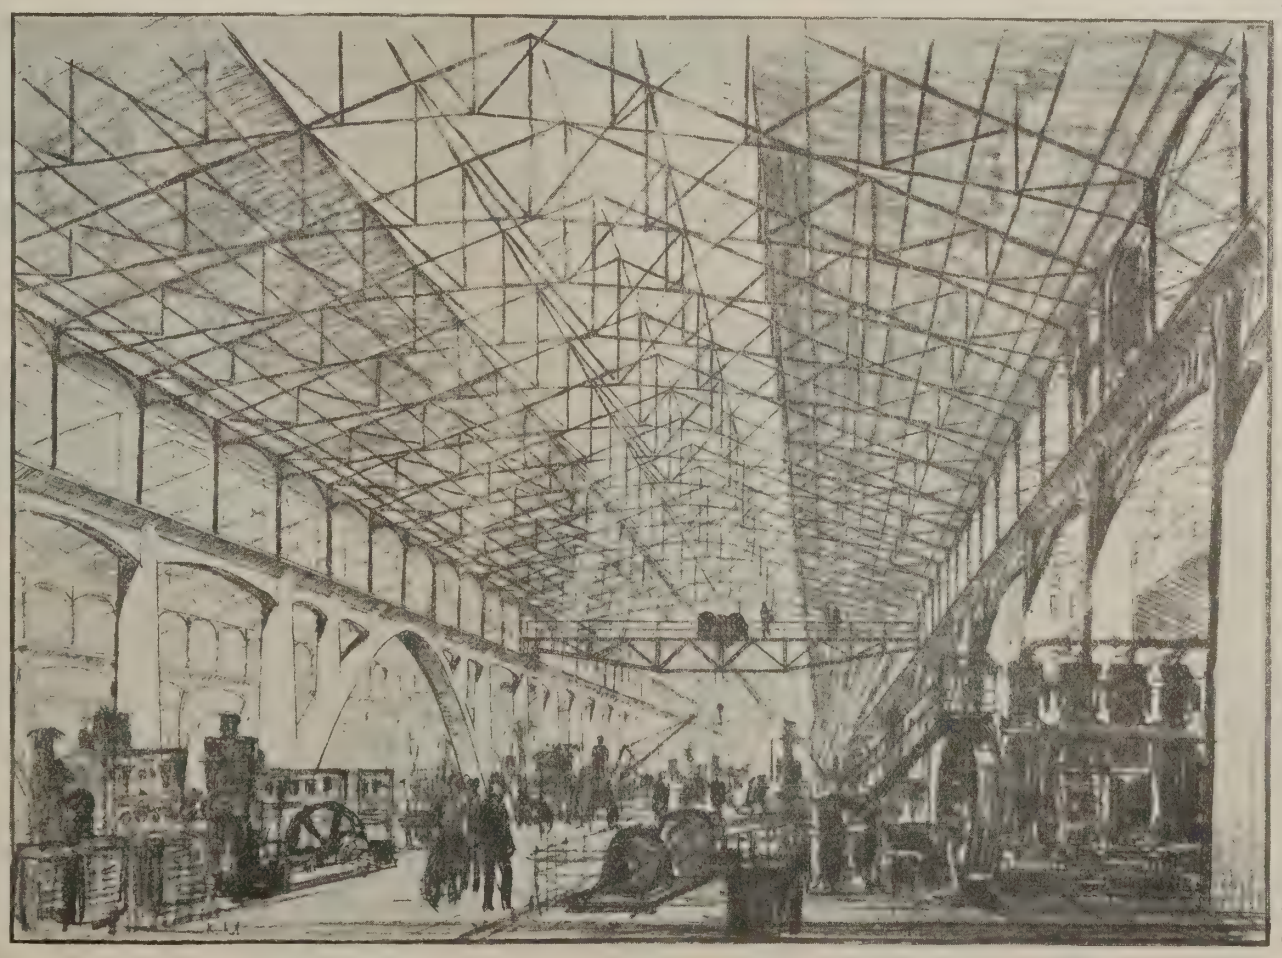
Encompassing the city and Westminster are twenty-seven Metropolitan boroughs that, with the two cities, comprise the municipal County of London. The boroughs on the west, the north, and the southwest are chiefly residential, while those on the east and southeast are mainly industrial. Surrounding the county are the suburban settlements, many of them laid out on garden-city lines. These form the rim of a vast and compact metropolis that is roughly circular in plan and is bisected into two equal divisions by the winding Thames.

It has been said that no other great city in Europe has such beautiful environs as London. The country around the British capital is not only beautiful, but so widely diverse in physical character and scenery that the pleasure of rural excursions never wanes through monotony. Northward lie pastoral Middlesex and the watercourses and farmlands of Hertfordshire; southward the rugged chalk-hills and greensand ridges of Surrey; eastward the forest lands of Essex; southeast the Kentish hills and orchards and hop-gardens, and westward the wooded undulations of Buckinghamshire, the county of Hampden, Penn, Gray and Burke.

Then there is the silvery Thames, winding along past stately Hampton Court and Royal Windsor. All around London are the fine estates, the old manor houses, and the sequestered villages with grey church tower rising above red-tiled roofs, that are typical features of the English countryside.

CHIEF AMONG THE HISTORIC LONDON BUILDINGS is the Tower of London, which stands by the river at the eastern side of the city. It is the finest example of a medieval castle in England, and consists of a double line of fortified walls inclosing the great keep —the White Tower—built by William the Conqueror.

No heed should be given to the pleasing fancies of the romantic novelist that the Tower was little more than a prison for victims of royal disfavor. For centuries it was the State workshop and strongroom. It was a citadel, an arsenal, a naval station, a mint, a palace, a place of safe keeping for the royal treasures. The regalia is still kept in safe custody there. The Tower is open to visitors daily, and the exhibits and other features are explained by the courteous wardens.



Nearly opposite the Tower is Southwark Cathedral, on the Bankside that was the site of Shakespeare's Globe Theater. This fine old building has associations with Shakespeare and other poets and playwrights, but maybe its chief interest for Americans will be the Harvard Chapel, which was restored in memory of John Harvard by students of the university that he founded. Harvard's father was a church warden of St. Saviour's, as the church was formerly termed.

Against the northern boundary of the city are the remains of two ancient priories—St. Bartholomew's Church and Charterhouse. The former is the oldest church in London, the nave a perfect example of Norman architecture. Charterhouse, associated with Thackeray's "The Newcomes," is an Elizabethan mansion used as an almshouse and school.

Virtually all the churches and other buildings mentioned as in the city have a great deal of historical interest. Thirty-two of these churches were designed by Wren, the architect, who rebuilt London after the Great Fire of 1666. The monument, in Billingsgate Fish Market, commemorates this fire. It is a tall stone column, from the top of which there are some fine prospects over London. Wren, its builder (he was an astronomer as well as an architect), at one time considered adapting it for a telescope.

Guildhall, with its Great Hall, Crypt and Museum, is another historic building of great interest, while to deal even briefly with the features and interest of St. Paul's Cathedral would fill whole pages of this publication. The Abbey and the Palace of Westminster have already been referred to.

Near the Abbey is the great cathedral erected in recent years by the English Catholics. Many decades must elapse ere the interior of this noble edifice be completed; but the portions already finished reflect the splendor that the interior will assume in years to come.

WAS IT NOT BURKE who termed the parks the Lungs of London? Surely few other large cities, particularly old cities, can boast of such an extensive tract of parkland in their very center as London. Hyde Park is about a square mile in area, and with the adjoining Green and St. James' Parks, form a continuous stretch of finely timbered parkland extending from Kensington on the west to Charing Cross and Westminster.

Hyde Park is the rendezvous of society, and the scene about Rotten Row near Hyde Park Corner when the rank and fashion of London foregather here in the season is brilliant in the extreme. The Green Park is skirted on one side by Piccadilly, in this part lined by fine mansions and clubs.

PLEDGES BUSINESS MEN'S WELCOME

IN supporting the official invitation being conveyed by the British Delegation of Advertising Men to the Advertising Clubs of the World at Atlantic City, to hold their 1924 Convention in London, a hearty welcome would be assured them by the business men of Great Britain who recognise the value of scientific advertising as one of the keystones to success in business progress.

Advertising has made great strides in recent years, but there is still room for improvement and the best method of developing this and formulating new methods is by the interchange of ideas around a conference table, and the Advertising Clubs of the World can rest assured every effort would be made to render the stay of their members as interesting as possible.

Palace, the residence of the Court when in London. Before the palace stands the fine Queen Victoria Memorial, whence a new processional road leads past St. James' Palace to Charing Cross. St. James' Palace was built originally by Henry VIII, and, although no longer a residence of the sovereign, is used for ceremonial purposes, such as levees. It is still to the Court of St. James that foreign ambassadors are accredited. The changing of the Guard at these palaces is a stately old-world ceremony that takes place daily.

On the east side of St. James' Park is the Horse Guards, originally the Guard House of Whitehall Palace, the only actual remains of which is the Banqueting Hall (now a museum). Another picturesque military ceremony is the changing of the mounted guard at Whitehall. Kensington Palace, at the western side of Hyde Park, is likewise a royal palace no longer a residence of the sovereign. Here the State Apartments are open to the public.

Regent's Park, on the north of London, is notable for its Zoological Gardens, the London Zoo, as it is popularly termed, taking foremost rank among the zoological collections of the world. The other parks of London are too numerous to be mentioned individually, while in additions to these open spaces there are various heaths and commons—chief among them Hampstead Heath and Wimbledon Common—scattered around the inner circle of London.

TO THE AVERAGE VISITOR the Thames in London seems anything but a river of commerce, albeit it is the greatest commercial river in the world, with entrances and clearances exceeding in tonnage and in value those of any other port. This is because the docks and wharves are below London Bridge, in a district to which the stranger seldom finds a way, except when impelled by business. Above the City the Thames is a broad stream on whose bosom few craft save barges float, the bridges debarring vessels of any size from going very far above the Tower of London.

Tower Wharf is quite a good point, however, at which the stranger can see something of London's shipping, for off the wharves here there are usually to be seen many vessels of good burden, while ever and anon the 500-ton bascules of the Tower Bridge are raised and lowered as craft enter or leave the Pool. The main range of docks and wharves extend from London Bridge to Barking Reach, a distance of several miles, and below the latter point are detached docks and wharves, as at Tilbury and Queenborough.

The docks and wharves and the appurtenant warehouses are under the Port of London Authority, a specially constituted body, from which permission can usually be obtained for an itinerary of any of the great docks under its control. Many of the sheds and warehouses are of great size and are literally crammed with valuable commodities, brought from the utter-most ends of the inhabited world.

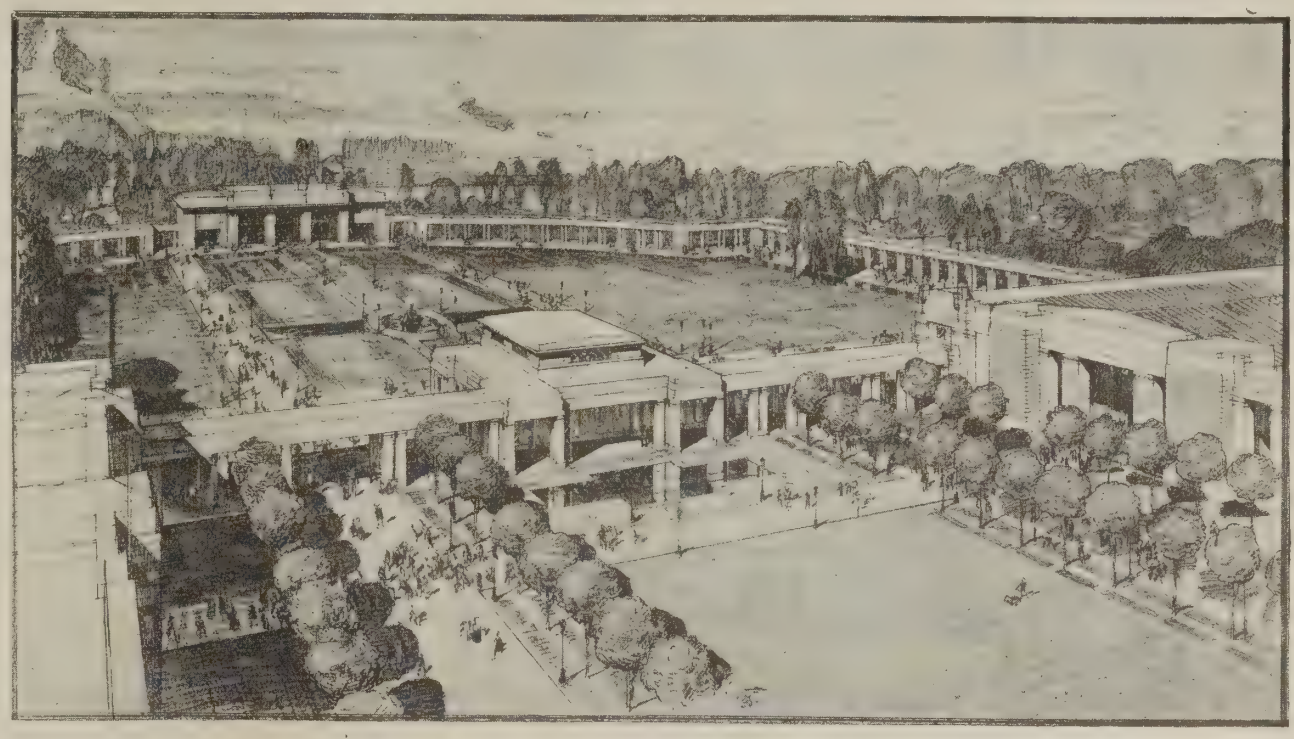
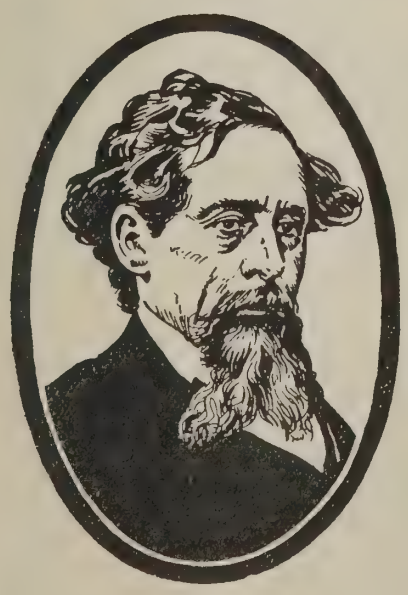
From the city to Chelsea, a distance of four miles, the left bank of the Thames is skirted by a splendid riverside drive, lined for the greater part of its length by pleasant gardens that are overlooked by fine buildings, among them several of the leading hotels. The Palace of Westminster stands at the end of the Victoria Embankment, which is the chief section of this drive. On the opposite bank there is only a short stretch of embankment, and on this side black wharves and warehouses alternate with imposing buildings, among the latter being the London County Hall.

Above London, at Kew, the Thames becomes a waterway of pleasure, and from this point a swarded towpath leads along past Kew Gardens to Richmond, and thence to Twickenham, Kingston and other famous up-river resorts. In summertime the scene on the river at these places is one of animation and gaiety, the beauty of the scenery and the gay attire of the river folk—in punt and dinghy and launch—composing a sight that remains long in the recollection of the stranger.



Kew Gardens are a domain of singular charm and beauty at all times; almost adjoining is Richmond, with the Terrace, whence come such glorious views over the Thames Valley, views such as Sir Walter Scott confessed that even Scotland had nought to vie with in beauty. At Richmond is a deer park that was formed by Charles I, and is now perhaps the finest public park in England. Above Kingston is Hampton Court, the magnificent riverside palace built for Cardinal Wolsey and which became a favorite residence of many of the English sovereigns. The State Apartments and the beautiful gardens are open to the public.

A REMARKABLE FEATURE of the business side of London is the segregation of the various professions and trades, each having its own recognized quarter of the town. Thus the lawyer's settlement is the old Inns of Court that fringe the western borders of the city, quaint old-world places, where offices, halls and churches are set about pleasant gardens.



These inns—the Inner Temple, the Middle Temple, Gray's Inn and Lincoln's Inn—constitute what is virtually a Legal University. They have been here for hundreds of years and their existence was responsible for the Courts of Justice being removed to this quarter in recent years. The specialists in medicine and in surgery are to be found in Harley street, in the West End, where almost every house in this long byway is occupied by a doctor. For art dealers one would go to the St. James' Square district, where are Christie's famous auction rooms and innumerable shops devoted exclusively to antiques and works of art generally. Bond street is another art quarter. For furniture there is the Tottenham Court Road, wherein many of the most important furnishing emporiums are situated.

The publishers have the Paternoster Row district, where is the old Hall of the Stationers Company. The neighboring Fleet street is the quarter of the printers. Here are the offices of the great British newspapers, and here, too, as one might expect, are to be found many of the leading advertising agencies.

For the shipping offices there are two distinct quarters, the chief one in the Leadenhall street district of the City, the other, mainly for passenger bookings, in Cockspur street, adjacent to the West End hotels. In recent years the Strand has developed into the recognized quarter for the offices of the British Overseas Dominions, chief among them the splendid building of the Australian Commonwealth. For the spice and dried-fruit merchants there is Eastcheap in the City; for the tea merchants Mincing Lane; for the corn merchants Mark Lane, and so on; almost every street of the city has its particular branch of commerce.

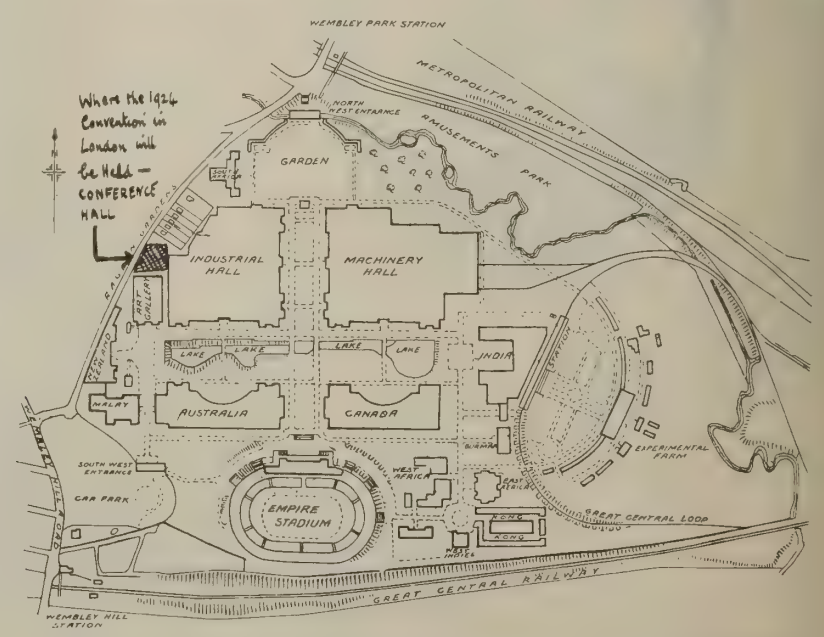
In Clerkenwell are the workshops of the silversmiths, in Bermondsey the great tanneries, in Southwark the offices and warehouses of the hop merchants. And this segregation is reflected even in trades of latter-day origin, for about Soho are offices of the moving-picture firms, and in Great Portland street the showrooms of the automobile manufacturers and agents.

Now this segregation has many advantages, not the least being that the visitor interested in a certain trade or profession has facilities for coming into direct contact with the subject of his attention, such as could never be available were all the individual members of such trade or profession distributed throughout London generally.

THE CHIEF SHOPPING THOROUGHFARES of London are the famous Regent street, Oxford street, the Brompton Road, and Knightsbridge, all of which are situated in Westminster. In Regent street and Oxford street many of the shops have been rebuilt on a splendid scale in very recent years, and when the reconstructions in progress will have been completed these two streets will be almost unrivaled among the shopping thoroughfares of Europe.

In Oxford street is the great store of Selfridge's, an establishment of magnificent design and proportions, with 200 departments. Harrod's Stores, in the Brompton Road, is another splendid emporium of world-wide fame, and, near by, are the extensive stores of Harvery Nichols' and Wolland's. Whiteley's, the first of the great stores established in London, is in the Westbourne Grove district, in the west. Besides those mentioned, there are various others, among the most notable being John Barker's, Derry and Toms', and Ponting's at Kensington, one of the fashionable West End districts. Certain of the stores adjoin stations of the Underground railways, and in several cases are connected with the stations by arcades flanked by the shop windows of the stores.

Advertising is a very important feature with the London stores, it being quite a common practice for many of the store to take one, two, and even three whole pages at frequent intervals in journals having a circulation ranging from half a million to a million and a half. The advertising managers of the great London stores are ever ready to exchange notes with American publicity men.



BUSINESS TO THE DAY, pleasure to the night. To the visitor the night side of London life generally centers around Piccadilly Circus and the Strand, about which are the theaters, the music halls, the cinemas, the taverns, the restaurants and all else that compose the ephemeral joys of a night in London. Piccadilly Circus has of late years acquired a Broadway touch with respect to illuminated signs, and what with these, the brilliance of the street lamps and those of the theaters and the like, and the throngs of people passing to and fro on pleasure bent, an animated and joyous scene is presented.

Of restaurants there is a choice to suit all tastes and all pockets. Corner houses where one may dine well, and to good music, for a few shillings; expensive restaurants that cater for the wealthy epicure; and the foreign restaurants of Soho, where one may obtain a wonderful many-course table d'hote, tastefully served, for a trifling sum, or an a la carte that extends to the other end of the scale. Many of the London taverns have American oyster bars, and other features adopted from the United States, some of them now not in vogue in that country. The taverns close about 10 o'clock, the restaurants at 11 or 12, the latter thus affording a chance for the theater folk to have supper before returning home.

Of night life of a workaday character there is much to be seen in the early hours of the morning in Fleet street, when the newspaper offices are at their busiest; and in Covent Garden, Smithfield and Billingsgate markets, when London's commissariat is working at its hardest.

IN GREATER LONDON there are nearly eight million people, and the great majority of the workers among them dwell at a distance from the scene of their labor. Bear this in mind: consider, too, the countless journeyings occasioned by everyday business activities; the attractions of the central area with respect to shopping, pleasure and entertainment; and, moreover, that there is always a considerable floating population of visitors in the capital, and it will be appreciated that the provision of adequate facilities for locomotion is a task of no mean proportions.

The chief transport undertakings are the combination of underground and surface railways, motor buses and street railways known as London's Underground; the street railways of the County Council; the underground and surface lines of the Metropolitan Railway, and the suburban lines of the trunk railways. Of these the London's Under-

An Invitation to the Advertising men of America

WE should like to know more of your splendid ideals, your large independent outlook, your frequently novel viewpoint. We should like to show you on the home ground just how the Englishman looks at things, how he looks at YOU, how he values your work in the world. Above all, we should like the opportunity of giving you a real English welcome to the greatest assemblage of English speaking peoples in history. They will come to the Mother Land from the four corners of the earth for the great Empire Exhibition—and they too would be unfeignedly glad to meet their cousins from the great Republic of the West. Englishmen will consider it a privilege to entertain you at the 1924 convention.

And while you are here, make a special point of visiting

Yorkshire

It is the largest county in England; it has 1/10 of the entire population; its activities and interests cover the whole range of English life, Industrially and Socially; in short, Yorkshire is England in miniature. And the commercial and social Capital of Yorkshire is

GREAT MERCHANT URGES LONDON 1924

LONDON will give a cordial and hospitable welcome to those good fellows from America when they come over here in 1924.

Aside from the work as members of the Advertising Clubs of America, a visit to this part of the world once every year or two or three years, is worth all it costs in time and money, and with equal effort I urge representative men from England to visit America as often. Let us all get together as frequently and as enthusiastically as we can.

ground group is by far the most important. The head of this great undertaking is Lord Ashfield, who as A. H. Stanley was general manager of the Jersey City Street Railways.

The railways of the Underground comprise about 115 route miles, inclusive of the section of the trunk lines over which the Underground trains run. The deep-level lines—the Tubes, as they are popularly termed—and their surface connections equal about 57 miles of this total; the District Railway, partly below and partly on the surface, 58 miles. Through physical connections with the trunk railways, the Underground lines have, on certain sections, been extended considerable distances into the rural districts. In the central area the system forms a regular network of underground lines, with stations in all the main thoroughfares, and a service of trains every one or two minutes during the busier hours of the day. In 1922 the Underground railways carried over 325,000,000 passengers.

The motor buses of the Underground group form a comprehensive system of locomotion extending throughout the whole of the Greater London area, the mileage of highways covered by the various services being well over 700, and over 900,000,000 passengers being dealt with yearly. These motor buses connect the central area with towns and villages far out in the country, and no mean proportion of the traffic, particularly at weekends, is derived from the facilities thus provided for country excursions; places of scenic attraction or historic interest, such as Guildford, Dorking, St. Albans, Windsor and Hampton Court being easily accessible by motor bus from Central London.

The street railways of the Underground group are in the north and western divisions of the capital, and have a length of about 117 route miles. The western section links up the towns of the Thames Valley, while the northern extends out into the rural environs on that side.

American advertising people visiting London will find in the publicity side of the Underground enterprises a feature of especial interest. Advertising in connection with transport undertakings, particularly in relation to street vehicles, is carried out in London on a scale quite unknown in America. In British advertising circles the London Underground occupies the foremost position, both with respect to its own publicity campaign and in the facilities it provides for commercial advertising generally.

A feature of the traffic advertising is the extensive use made of the artistic poster, the majority of which are designed by well-known artists and the tasteful display of which imparts to the Underground stations a character peculiarly their own.

Riding in "Rotten Row," Hyde Park, is the proper morning pastime in London. If one doesn't care to ride, he can watch the parade of fashion pass, and he will be sure to find many prominent Americans among the riders.

LEEDS, one of the mighty, pulsing industrial centres of Britain, is a hospitable city. But a proud one also. Proud, that is, of its prosperity; and proud of those things to which a price cannot be set—its music (Yorkshire singing is proverbial), its university, its public-spirited citizenship. So when Leeds hears somebody say: "London, 1924," it is inclined with prideful Yorkshire bluntness to answer: "Has't forgotten Leeds?" And in May and June of the year, there is no pleasanter site in the wide world than the dales of Yorkshire full of springtide glory. "Gracious the beauty of dale and moor, and oh, how hospitable the people."

To London, Leeds

adds a typically Yorkshire welcome, loud and deep enough to echo across the Atlantic and reverberate in the hearts of the delegates to Atlantic City. "Put my welcome to the test," says Leeds, "and prove that every word is true. CRAWFORD, FATHER OF ON-TO-LONDON CONVENTION MOVEMENT

Idea Conceived by a Scotsman Determined to Go One Better —Sketch of Activities Leading Up to British Delegation's Visit

By ONE OF THE DELEGATES

IT'S no use "Wullie" Crawford trying to hide his head. This On-to-London Movement was his idea. He is its father. And it all came of that terrible Scottish failing that brings so many of the Caledonian race to London and leaves them there—a weakness for doing something better than their neighbors.

This is how it happened. In 1920 the Thirty Club of London organized a Great Advertising Exhibition at the White City, which attracted hundreds of thousands of people and put advertising as such where it had never been before. That exhibition sprang from the brain of J. C. Akerman, that year's reigning president of the club. W. S. Crawford was vice-chairman of the exhibition and a few months later took the club presidential chair.

"Eh, lad, but Jock Akerman was a braw laddie. Nay, but I'll gae yin better," or words to that effect, is what "Wullie" Crawford is reported to have said on that occasion.

And in March, 1921, came the inspiration.

He put forward the bold idea of inviting the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to hold a convention in London. It is reported—equally without authority—that Jack Akerman visibly wilted at this answer to his challenge, but, sportsman that he is, he dissembled his feeling and led the applause which greeted the subsequent resolution.

Events began to move as the idea took root. Sir Charles Higham interested the late Lord Northcliffe in the proposal and went to America bearing an invitation endorsed by the great publisher. He was sympathetically received and; with the invitation presented at the Milwaukee convention in 1922, the seed was planted in United States soil. Meantime Mr. Crawford had been elected vice-president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World and this merely spurred him to achievement. He nursed it on his own side of the water and his opportunity came when the A. A. C. W. appointed F. A. Wilson-Lawrenson as chairman of the investigation committee to look over London and sound the depths of its sincerity.

On January 18, 1923, Mr. Wilson-Lawrenson met the Thirty Club in session at dinner and told its members and their guests what he had come to do. He intimated that if London wanted the convention for 1924 it must have the great organizations of the country behind it; it must send a representative and adequate delegation from the United Kingdom to Atlantic City in June; it must show tangible benefits to be gained from holding the convention in London, and must present a program of business and entertainment offered by British advertising men.

Mr. Crawford, in response, stated simply that this country had the ability and the resources, and the new age of advertising men were climbing very high. He said the convention must come to London. At this same dinner, Lieut.-Col. E. F. Lawson, representing the Newspaper Proprietors' Association; Sir Edward Benn, representing the technical press; James Strong, representing the Association of British Advertising Agents; and members of several other organizations offered complete support. John Cheshire presided and Sir Philip Lloyd Greams, president of the Board of Trade, was among those present.

Mr. Lawrenson's stay in London was marked by several significant events. The London Daily Mail actually gave a column a day to reporting his aims and activities—a generosity that had never been accorded to any other personality. The Prime Minister, A. Bonar Law, received Mr. Lawrenson and expressed keen and cordial interest in his mission.

The crowning events were the announcements that Viscount Rothermere and Sir Edward Hulton would each give twenty-five thousand dollars toward the conduct of the 1924 convention, if secured for London, and each pledged the full support of their newspapers.

With his departure from British shores, the Thirty Club set to work to bring together its delegation for June, prepare its story, frame its invitation, and plan its program for 1924. Into this work three men threw themselves with assiduity—President John Cheshire, Vice-President William S. Crawford, and Honorary Secretary C. Harold Vernon. At a convention rally dinner, held on March 13, offers of entertainment, printing assistance and blocks flowed in and it was at the suggestion of Mr. Crawford that those present were invited to put up funds for carrying on the good work. The Times, through J. C. Akerman, put up five thousand dollars for preliminary work. And among the members present (less than forty in number) the sum of five hundred guineas was subscribed in less than ten minutes!

The enthusiasm thus displayed set the seal of success to the rally, and between that hour and the time these notes are being written, there has been one ceaseless, almost sleepless, round of activities that will only culminate in the first stage with the sailing of the Thirty Club delegates on the "Berengaria" on May 26.

W. S. Crawford—A Red Hot Scot

CARLYLE said if you could once make a Scot red hot he would fire the world. William S. Crawford is a red-hot Scot, radiating energy and enthusiasm wherever he goes. He has built one of the largest and most complete advertising organizations in Britain in less than nine years by sheer force of personality.

He began his advertising organization just before the start of the great war. Business almost ceased, papers had no space for advertisements, but still the Crawford organization grew. From the terrible four years of the war it emerged one of the strongest and most progressive advertising houses in Britain.

William S. Crawford is well known in the United States. He is a good mixer, a shrewd judge of men, with almost uncanny insight into character, and a speaker who, if caught in the right mood, will capture any audience. He has his enemies. No man of his impetuous disposition could fail to make a few, but his friends are legion.

The idea of holding the advertising convention in London in 1924 was his. It was his energy and enthusiasm which induced the Thirty Club to undertake this work. This was his proudest achievement when he was its president.

In everything that has made for advertising progress of recent years William S. Crawford has been in the thick of the fight. He was vice-chairman of the Great Advertising Exhibition held at the White City in 1920 which first really put advertising on the map for Englishmen He is vice-president of the Thirty Club, the leading advertising club of London, and European vice-president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

When the organization of the great British Empire Exhibition that is to be held in 1924 found that its publicity was inadequate its chairman, the Prince of Wales, asked William S. Crawford to become honorary publicity director. In a month the publicity service of the exhibition was transformed.

He comes to the United States on this visit as accredited representative of the British Empire Exhibition.

SPECTATOR SELLS LIFE MEMBERSHIPS

Much Interest Aroused in Britain Over Unique Plan Adopted by Weekly Paper to Interest Its Readers

Much interest has been aroused in Great Britain over the "life membership" subscription plan proposed by the London Spectator, which is said by that weekly to have had a wide response from readers.

J. St. Loe Strachey, editor, started the ball rolling March 10 when he announced the plan in a leading editorial. The editorial pointed out that a great deal of resentment has grown up among readers at the idea of being bought and sold with a newspaper "as if they were the livestock on a farm." It is declared that "the feeling of readers toward their favorite newspapers is akin to that of members towards a club," and that "there is a strong desire that newspaper readers should have some say in the matter of newspaper sales, and that they should not, as often now, hear no whisper of their fate till it is accomplished.

To remedy this state of affairs, the Spectator proposed a life membership similar to that in clubs. These life members, whose fee would be in proportion to their ages, would have certain rights and privileges, including those of audience and consultation in the policies of the paper.

The editorial suggested that the articles of association might contain a clause making it impossible for the holders of the ordinary shares of stock in the paper to part with a majority of such shares—that is, with the controlling interest in the paper—without giving due notice to the life subscribers that a sale was contemplated. If a group of these life members, within two months, determined to exercise their privilege of pre-emption, they might have the right to purchase at the sum at which the proprietor of the controlling shares had contracted to sell.

Letters to the editor evoked by this proposal occupied two pages in the following issue of the Spectator. In the issue of March 24 the Spectator stated that it had received acceptances from about 50 persons who desired to become life members. It therefore offered semi-definite proposals.

Life memberships are offered to persons between 44 and 55 for 14 guineas, between 55 and 65 for 11 guineas, between 65 and 75 for nine guineas, over 75 five guineas. Persons with paid subscriptions yet to run will be so credited, and the word of the subscriber as to his age will of course be taken. The life members will not be affected by any increase in the price of paper that may be made.

The Spectator announces that the life members will be invited from time to time to meetings with the editorial staff and directors of the paper to confer as to the welfare of the publication and its readers.

FOREIGN AD DISPLAY

Interesting "Side Show" at New Orleans Trade Convention

Upwards of 90 American firms were represented in a foreign advertising display that was one of the interesting "side shows" of the foreign trade convention held in New Orleans May 2-4.

The collection was made by the International Western Electric Company. It is to go to New York and be exhibited by the Advertising Club. It will then go on a tour of some of the Eastern universities, and will ultimately be the property of Harvard.

In this display the trade-mark is especially featured. The trade-mark is not so important to an American buyer; but in many foreign countries goods are bought entirely by trade-mark. The illiteracy of the population is largely the cause; the temperament of the peoples completes the explanation.

FROM the rock-bound coast of Cornwall to the peaceful land of Shakespeare—from Jordan's Meeting House to Plymouth Hoe, the Great Western Railway traverses from end to end all the notable historic sites which in the far-off seventeenth century played so prominent a part in the foundation of New England, or were closely connected with some remarkable occurrence in the history of the United States.

Within the compass of a single week the American pilgrim is able, by the aid of the Great Western, to visit the Travel Shrines of the Western Shires shown on this page.

Passengers landing in Liverpool or Plymouth can, as will be seen by the map, visit many of these places on their way to London. Passengers landing at Southhampton and traveling to London first will find all these historic sites and scenes easily accessible by the magnificent express trains of the Great Western Railway from Paddington Station.

The Great Western Railway Company has published the following illustrated Guide books, replete with practical information and splendid maps, which will be of great value and interest to American travelers to these places.

LET'S MAKE IT A REAL WORLD CONGRESS OF AD CLUBS, SAYS CRAWFORD

Vice-President of Thirty Club and A. A. C. W. Official Declares Field of Barter Between the Two Nations Has Hardly Been Scratched

By W. S. CRAWFORD

Vice-President of the Thirty Club, and European Vice-President of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World

I HAVE BEEN IMPRESSED on my visits to America by the fact that the term, "The Associated Advertising Club of the World," is a misnomer. Till now it has merely meant the Associated Advertising Clubs of America.

Great as American advertising is, wonderful in its power and developments, I can envisage something even greater—an advertising movement that is not local, but universal—a real Congress of the Advertisers of the World. This proposed visit of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to England is, I am confident, merely the precursor of a series of other conventions to be held the world over—conventions which will result in a development of trade almost unimaginable to us at present.

What has America to gain by the acceptance of this invitation? I speak without arrogance when I say that the business methods of the nation which has done the largest foreign trade in the world must be worth studying. Just as it is well worth an Englishman's while to study American advertising methods and practices, so, too, British methods of merchandising, their credit systems in the export trade, their wonderful agency systems in foreign centers, are well worth the attention of every responsible American business man.

America is doing a great business with England at present, but it is only a tithe of the business it might do. As I go to and fro in the States, as I read the admirable advertisements in your periodicals, I see scores and hundreds of articles unknown in England—ingenious, novel and beautiful things which have only to be known here to gain a successful market. Exchange troubles have almost vanished, thanks to our incorrigible British habit of paying 20 shillings in the pound. It is a market in which one can trade with absolute confidence, for the British merchant's word is his bond.

If our invitation be accepted, the visitors to the convention in 1924 will not only have the opportunity of studying British business methods, but they will also have every chance of doing good business. As it is proposed that the convention be held at the Great British Empire Exhibition at Wembley, they will also meet buyers and merchants from the whole of the British Empire. Such an opportunity is indeed a wonderful one.

What has England to gain by this visit? In the first place, we shall benefit greatly by the advice and experience of a thousand or more of the most virile and energetic of American business men. Your experience will aid us in our problems. Apart from this, American advertising men will see the opportunities for doing big business with British goods in the States.

We are paying our great debts to you. We make no boast about that. It is the custom of the British and American races to meet their obligations and we recognize that in this matter we have been fairly and liberally treated. But if we are to pay we must pay in British goods. We have no gold mines in our little island. All we can do is to pay our debts with the products of British brawn and brain. Our goods enjoy a high reputation in your land and there are many more of our products which only need advertising and putting on your markets to become highly popular amongst you.

But beyond the mutual benefit of our common experiences, beyond the advantages we shall gain by greater trading together, there is something greater—something finer.

I predict that this visit will unite in closer bonds of friendship and brotherhood the two great nations in whose hands lie the destinies of the world's civilizations.

I picture our nations jointly keeping the world's peace, rising higher and higher in the plane of civilization, and leading the world to developments hitherto unknown.

It may be but a vision—but all the best things in the world were once visions. The visions of today are the realities of tomorrow.

WHAT LONDON WANTS

THE Bureau of Advertising Facts, says the Advertisers Weekly, London, has issued its report on Questionnaire Number 2, in which members of the public were asked to fill in the name of the brand they would buy of no less than fifty different classes of goods.

Herewith are given the main results, showing the number of votes recorded for the five leading brands in each commodity, with notes and remarks upon the items of outstanding interest.

The total number of papers received was 450, which number represents the maximum number of votes which any one brand could receive. The votes were divided into three classes—those recorded by men, married women and single women. In this resumé, however, only the totals are given. In most cases three or four brands have between them 60 to 80 per cent of the London market.

Item 1—Health Salts.—1st, Eno's, 177 votes; 2nd, Kruschen, 145; 3rd, Andrew's, 55; 4th, Will's, 17; 5th Epsom (unbranded), 15.

The result of Kruschen's extensive and effective advertising is strongly apparent. Eno's position as leader indicates power of cumulative advertising over a long period of years.

Item 2—Whisky.—1st, Johnnie Walker; 2nd, Black and White; 3rd, Haig & Haig; 4th, Dewar's; 5th, Dunville. Success of Haig & Haig particularly noteworthy in view of limited volume of advertising.

Item 3—Port Wine.—1st, Sandeman's 117 votes; 2nd, Gilbey's, 93; 3rd, Cockburn's, 21; 4th, Short's, 16; 5th, Concord, 11. The small number of votes recorded for Concord is particularly interesting.

Item 4—Collars.—1st, Summit, 225 votes; 2nd, Hope Bros., 33; 3rd, Horne, 19; 4th, Kingdom & Meakers, 15; 5th, Radiac, 11. Striking evidence of the value of a brand name backed by first-class advertising.

Item 5—Underwear.—1st, Wolsey, 228 votes; 2nd, Jaeger, 51; 3rd, Pesco, 25; 4th, Alpha and Sensola 18; 5th, Chilprufe, 15.

Item 6—Shoes and Boots.—1st, Lotus and Delta, 87 votes; 2nd, Trueform 58; Mansfield, 51; Saxone and Sorosis, 31; Abbotts, 19.

Item 7—Toothpaste.—Kolynos, 74; Pepsodent, 73; Colgate, 69; Gibbs, 57; Euthymol, 46. Where are the British brands?

Item 8—Shaving Soap.—Pears, 133; Colgate, 50; Vinolia, 36; Gibbs, 35; Williams, 35. Pears Golden Series triumphed in all cases except the toothpaste, which only secured 11 votes out of 450. A suggestion for Pears advertising department.

Item 9—Toilet Soap.—Pears, 128; Yardley, 48; Palmolive, 36; Erasmic, 34; Wright's Coal Tar, 34. An easy winner. A curious mixture of old and new.

Item 10—Razors.—Gillette, 209; Valet Autostrop, 69; Kropp, 30; Clemak, 19; Ever-ready, 11. An extraordinary gap between first and second difficult to account for.

Item 11—Talcum Powder.—Pears, 130; Yardley's 35; Cuticura, 25; Mennens, 22; Vinolia, 21. Yardley's rapid rise a testimony to their fine advertising.

Item 12—Breakfast Foods.—Quaker Oats, 84; Scott's, 50; Grape Nuts, 29; Force, 34; Plasmon, 17. A surprising preference for porridge.

Item 13—Ordinary Cigarettes.—Player's, 115; Goldflake, 99; Kensitas, 39; Wills, 22; Three Castles, 18.

Item 14—Cigarettes (Special).—Abdulla, 115; State Express, 38; De Reszke, 74; Greys, 14; Kensitas, 10. An overwhelming gap between 1st and 2nd.

Item 15—Pipes.—Dunhill's, 98; Civic, 37; City de Luxe, 26; Bewlay, 24; BBB, 24. No Press advertising issued by winner. Position largely due to extension of the Dunhill cult during the war.

Item 16—Motor Cycles.—Douglas, 83; Triumph, 65; Rudge, 43; Indian, 37; B.S.A., 32.

Item 17—Gramophones.—H.M.V., 251; Columbia, 24; Aeolian, 24; Decca, 19; Pathé, 18. An amazing share of the market for a single firm.

Item 18—Shoe Polish.—Blossom, 153; Nugget, 115; Kiwi, 87; Wren's, 32; Tanco, 22.

Item 19—Furniture.—Maple, 113; Waring & Gillow, 42; Drage, 25; Hampton, 17; Harrods, 16. No advertising man would have predicted this order.

Item 20—Easy Chairs.—Berkeley, 194; Buoyant, 46; Maples, 32. Buoyant quickly gained a good position.

Item 21—Fountain Pens.—Swan, 186; Waterman, 139; Onoto, 82; John Bull, 8; Conway Stewart, 4. Three firms share over three-fourths of the London market.

Item 22—Pencils.—Venus, 176; Eversharp, 145; Koh-i-noor, 50; Royal Sovereign, 31. In view of price Eversharp's position very strong.

Item 23—Cocoa.—Cadbury, 82; Bournville, 131; Rowntree's, 95; Fray's, 49; Van Houten, 24.

Item 25—Coffee.—Lyons', 82; Camp, 60; Red, White and Blue, 41; Home & Colonial, 24; Kardamak, 12.

Item 26—Corsets.—Spirella, 77; J.B., 50; C.B., 46; Twilfit, 44; Worcester, 29. Spirella's success particularly interesting in view of the fact that no press advertising is used.

Item 27—Stockings.—Holeproof, 63; Morley's, 52; Jason, 31; Jaeger, 20; Wolsey, 18.

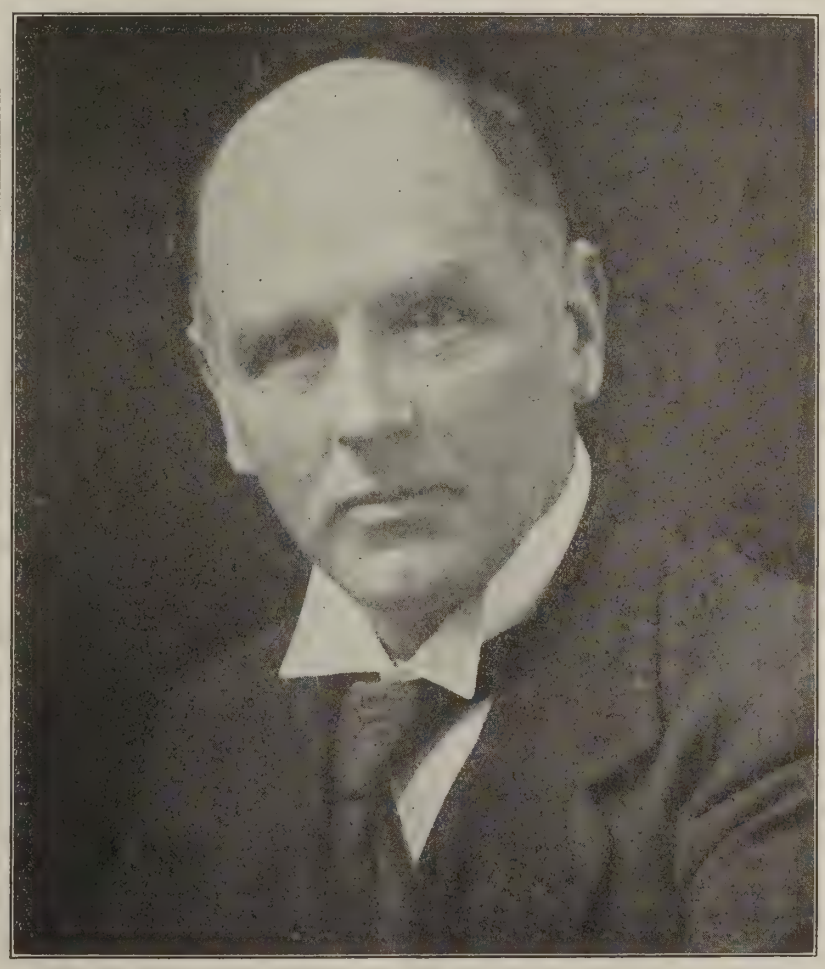
Item 28—Waterproofs.—Burberry, 217; Dexter, 34; Mattamac, 31.

Item 29—Face Powder.—Icilma, 73; Poudre Nilde, 35; Pompeian, 14.

Item 30—Face Cream.—Icilma, 110; Pond's, 64; Pomeroy, 22; Pompeian, 16; Oatine, 14.

Item 31—Tooth Brushes.—Koh-i-noor, 88; Boots, 75; Prophylactic, 67; Pears, 6.

Item 32—Baby Foods.—Glaxo, 308; Allenbury, 90; Mellins, 39; Bengers, 12; Cow and Gate, 10.



Item 33—Boot Rubbers.—Phillips'; Wood Milne; Redfern, 31.

Item 34—Pickles.—Panyan; Lazenbys; Heinz; Military; C. & B.

Item 35—Tinned Fruit.—C. & B., 32; Libby, 31; Chivers, 31; Bartlett, 24; Lazenby, 20. A very evenly divided market. An opportunity for an extensive advertising campaign.

Item 36—Baking Powder.—Borwick's; Bird's,

"GET TOGETHER," SIR SYDNEY M. SKINNER'S MESSAGE

I HOPE to see the Advertising Convention come to London next year. Round Table talks are all to the good, and Conferences between the business men of the English-Speaking race I look upon as a particularly favourable omen for future relationship. My recent visit to America, where I was received with a fine courtesy and a cousinly feeling which I take this further opportunity to gratefully acknowledge, confirms me in the opinion that an interchange of ideas must be to our mutual advantage. We have a great deal to learn from America: on the other hand, I think our friends across the sea will find something in our traditions and methods that will be of help to them.

The more business men get together and discuss business affairs and business difficulties, the better for business generally. And in the future, more than in the past, advertising will be a pregnant factor in business development. In my experience, advertising is merchandising, and merchandising is business. In England we have not, as a body, risen to the possibilities of advertising, and a visit from America will be a stimulation and, I think, an education.

SYDNEY M. SKINNER.

desirous of placing their goods on the British market, to whom we add our welcome to the Advertising Convention taking place in Great Britain in 1924. Since 1878 we have been intimately acquainted with that market, and have successfully handled the propositions of many leading American and British firms whose specialties are today known throughout the world.

From the start we have been responsible for the publicity of B. S. A. Ltd., renowned for their Guns, Motor Cars, Motor Cycles, and Cycles, the Daimler Motor Co. Ltd., the Chiswick Polish Co. Ltd., manufacturers of the celebrated Cherry Blossom Boot Polish and Mansion Polish, the Columbia Graphophone Co. Ltd., the Dictaphone Co. Ltd., Sir Herbert Marshall & Sons Ltd., of the Famous Angelus Player-Pianos and a large number of similar important firms.

This is an indication that we are in a position to help you to the utmost possible degree. The British Market is far cheaper to exploit than the American Market. Our business premises are situated in the very heart of London's most important trading centre, and we extend to you a cordial welcome to visit us.

AMERICAN GOODS HOUSEHOLD WORDS IN UNITED KINGDOM

Both Buyers and Sellers Are Among British Delegation to Ad Club Convention; Role to Be Reversed Next Year

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER from its London Editor)

THE INTERCHANGE OF COMMERCE is necessary to the progress of the world. No country can exist for long under conditions of progress upon internally produced goods alone. Its people cannot live upon themselves. From the beginning barter was the means of exchange.

Today the principle is wide in scope and the nations of the world barter on the international scale. Private trading enterprise creates a product, and by the application of publicity creates also a demand for it. Soon that development reaches such a stage that it is possible not only to supply the needs of a home market, but to look farther afield, overseas, maybe, for another market. It is private enterprise that creates markets abroad, and both the trader and his country are enriched.

It is difficult to imagine, under conditions of nationalized manufacturing any development of markets overseas.

Great Britain enjoys a supremacy in many industries and her private enterprise has carried her wares to the uttermost corners of the earth. Many articles in common use today throughout the United States are owed to Great Britain. They are of such a character and standard as to leave no doubt as to their permanence.

With the passage of time and gradually improving conditions, the number of products Americans thus owe to British enterprise must of necessity increase. It may be that some British visitors to Atlantic City will see, during their stay in America, opportunities for the marketable exploitation of products in which they are interested.

The British have many manufactured commodities that they can sell to America. The delegates who may elect to see the great exhibition of British Empire manufactures in London next year will find evidence of perhaps a far greater enterprise than they have imagined.

Americans are buyers as well as sellers. The purpose of the Atlantic City convention is to bring together the men who sell things. Where there are sellers there are buyers—the relationship shifts everlastingly.

It is not conceivable that an American business man would decline to make a purchase merely because the article was made in England. When one wants, one buys. The seller cannot be the seller only for all time; he must face some other trader as a buyer.

Both buyers and sellers may be among the delegates arriving in America in a few days. If a delegation goes to London from America next year, that body likewise will include buyers and sellers—the position being reversed in many cases.

America cannot stand still. Britain cannot stand still.

More and more must the exchanges open and the flow of goods increase in either direction.

It may not, perhaps, be realized what a vast number of products now popular in Great Britain as household words and in everyday use owe their origin to the enterprise of United States manufacturers or producers.

One of the delegates from England, a prominent newspaper man, compiled for his own use a list of American houses now operating in Great Britain and of goods now in common use that originated in America, and it is an amazing tribute to the foresight of American business men. Some of the commodities named are now to all intents and purposes British throughout, owned by British companies, manufactured entirely in British factories with British capital and by British labor, but this does not alter the fact that they owed their birth to America, even though they are British by adoption.

ONE of the most charming day trips about London is the visit to Windsor Castle, the summer home of the English Royal family, up the river Thames from London. The monumental pile of the castle rises on a hill above the river, and the great park behind it has large herds of tame deer that feed under stately oak trees. Eton school is located in the picturesque village below the castle, and here the streets are full of youths in the high hats, Eton collars and tight fitting Eton suits the school has made famous throughout the world.

LONDON IN 1924 ESSAY WINS SILVER CUP

H. H. Radford's Paper, Reproduced Herewith, Gave "Good Reasons and Results" in Publicity Club Contest

EARLY this year, W. S. Crawford offered a silver challenge cup among the members of the Publicity Club of London, to be won by the writer of the paper that most satisfactorily answered

The Poster Stamp is being liberally used by the Thirty Club of London in its campaign for the Advertising Clubs' Convention. The cut was made by Alfred Craske, London engraver, and the stamp has been printed in generous quantities by Hill Siffken & Co., also of London. Its is printed in colors and is being distributed by U. B. Walmsley, honorary secretary of the London Committee of the Thirty Club.

the question why the advertising convention should be held in London in 1924.

The following is the winning paper, submitted by W. H. H. Radford, Muswell Hill, and it is printed here because it assembles an array of arguments that not only present the advantages for American visitors to London, but frankly states the British viewpoint and just what Great Britain expects to get out of it. The paper, entitled "Good Reasons and Results," follows:

The British Empire Exhibition in 1924 will draw together business men from all the world over, making the convention really world-wide.

England is still the greatest trading nation and London the commercial and financial center of the world. No city offers so many historic and interesting sights; no country so many places dear to American sentiments. London's attractions will be on an unprecedented scale.

World-wide knowledge of selling and distribution is good economically, every business community would benefit by new inspiration and broader outlook.

The discussion of advertising and selling would lead, in a constructive way, to the better development of international trade, a better understanding between America and Britain, and the general well-being of these two great English-speaking peoples. It would assist prosperity in this country, lesson unemployment, reduce our indebtedness to America, and improve tariff relations.

It will be London's first opportunity to compare the selling and advertising methods of the world.

It will benefit us by breaking down public prejudice and making it understood that reputable advertising reduces the cost of goods to the people.

The press publicity given will awaken deeper interest and confidence in advertising on the part of British manufacturers and public—"advertising advertising" with a vengeance.

It will cause British business men to consider advertising in wider terms instead of sectionally, helping to destroy their unwillingness to pool their advertising and selling experiences.

It will bring before every section of business the value of advertising as a prime necessity in reducing selling costs.

British advertisers would realize that American advertising is better chiefly because American advertisers pay proportionally higher for the preparation of their advertising.

American advertisers will better understand the reasons for some of their selling schemes over here not reaching the standard of success anticipated.

Whilst convinced Americans can teach us much, we also believe we can teach them something.

That, compatible with British marketing conditions, our selling methods are mainly sound and efficient.

It would assist in the discovery of markets in America awaiting British business men to develop and vice versa, and what goods could thus be profitably sold.

It should set the commercial world agog with new ideas and build up trans-Atlantic trade.

British manufacturers and advertising men are receptive to ideas emanating from America and progressive enough to offer valuable improvements and so keenly desire the convention as to justify its being held here.

Speaking generally, men will learn new methods of solving distribution problems.

Hundreds of Americans will know more of London that they did and learn something of our national customs and conditions.

Britons will have an opportunity of repaying, in small measure, courtesies extended to them in America, and cementing Anglo-American friendships.

Recognition will be given in this ocuntry to advertising clubs like the Publicity Club as representing a properly defined business.

The convention in London might penetrate official circles and lead to legislation to insure only genuine advertising.

The convention has never been held outside America, so the A.A.C.W., to deserve its title, must meet in London.

Right gladly do we endorse the

IRELAND'S

BIGGEST NEWSPAPER PROPOSITION

The IRISH INDEPENDENT, the world-famed Dublin morning, that has a net, certified daily sale considerably more than 3 times that of any other Irish morning Newspaper. Not only is the IRISH INDEPENDENT easily the biggest Newspaper proposition in Ireland, but it is also one of the most modernized, one of the sanest, most enterprising, and most prosperous daily publications in Europe. The mechanical equipment at the disposal of the Proprietors of the IRISH INDEPENDENT is the last word in up-to-dateness. The exceptionally beautiful new building, just completed, for the IRISH INDEPENDENT and its three associated Newspapers (the DUBLIN EVENING HERALD, the IRISH WEEKLY INDEPENDENT, and the IRISH SUNDAY INDEPENDENT) costing close on 1,000,000 dollars, is considered to be amongst the most attractive, luxurious and completely equipped Newspaper buildings in the world.

The IRISH INDEPENDENT has blazed the trail in new ideas for years. It was the first morning newspaper outside the continent of America to publish net sales. That was 14 years ago—it has continued this practice ever since. It is the only Irish Newspaper that can be truly described as the Newspaper of the whole nation. Every advertiser of note who uses an Irish Newspaper uses the IRISH INDEPENDENT as a matter of course.

Greetings and Good Wishes to The Great Convention and Good Luck to the "On-to-London" Movement

The IRISH INDEPENDENT was amongst the first Newspapers outside America to support the A. A. C. W.

r. McConnell said:

reland was never so prosperous as is today. This is abundantly proved official figures. During the war emir ion was prohibited, and as a consence the population increased. At the e time the agricultural wealth of the ntry also increased, principally owing he incentive given by the Governt to farmers to produce more food. l figures given beneath are quoted n official sources and clearly demone the rapid growth of wealth. They prove that this growth was not con to the period of the war, for the t figures are the most satisfactory ll.

n 1910 the deposits and cash balances oint stock banks amounted to £52,-000; at the end of 1917 this figure grown to £91,361,000; on June 30th, , it had been increased to £163,509,- an interesting index to the unpreceed prosperity of the country.

Deposits in the Post Office Savings ac grew from a normal £3,585,000 to 70,000 in 1917, and on December 1919, they totalled £16,940,000.

he amount of Government Stocks which dividends were payable at the of Ireland on June 30th, 1920, was 63,000, which showed an increase of 72,000 over the corresponding pe- of 1914; an increase of £16,954,000 1918, and of £4,770,000 over 1919.

hese figures speak for themselves. you like to analyze them further, have 163 millions on deposit in the s, 95 millions in British Government securities and 17 millions in the Post Office Savings Bank, a total of 275 millions of money, and this gives you a surplus of 72 millions of money over and above the imports into the country in a year, which are 203 millions. That means we are able to pay cash for all the goods we get in a year and have 72 millions of money lying in the bank. That is how it appeals to me as an advertising man."

The Baltimore Sun and the Evening Sun have shown an affinity for Rhodes' scholars from Maryland. The latest acquisition is Francis F. Beirne who has joined the force of editorial writers, having left the Baltimore News. He was elected from Virginia in 1911. He was on the staff of the Sun some years ago and was a first lieutenant of infantry in France during the war.

Felix Morley, who has been on the editorial staff of the Sun for some months, was elected a Rhodes' scholar while serving in the ambulance service in France in 1916. He took up his residence at Oxford in 1919. He has been associated with the Philadelphia Public Ledger, with the United Press and with the Philadelphia North American.

Percy Maddox, who was a member of the local staff of the Evening Sun last summer, was elected last year and is now at Oxford.

Patrick T. Montford, of the Freeman's Journal, Dublin, is a veritable cyclopaedia of facts relating to business openings and prospects in the Irish Free State for manufacturers, and will gladly impart the information to any interested. He is a delegate among our friends from England.

"HEARTY WELCOME"—COSGRAVE

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

PRESIDENT COSGRAVE, head of Government of the Irish Free State, interviewed by a representative of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, said if the Convention decided to meet in London next year the members would, he hoped, take the opportunity of visiting Ireland and see for themselves how the foundations of future development and prosperity were being laid. Revolution and its aftermath will ere then have completely passed away and Ireland, at last able to concentrate on problems of reconstruction and progress, will doubtless share in benefits from discussions at the Convention on the European side of the Atlantic. Many ties of friendship bind Ireland with America and visitors from any part will find a hearty welcome awaiting them in this country.

CORK HAS POWERFUL GROUP OF PAPERS

South of Ireland Press Exhibits Lively Interest in British Invitation to American Advertising Folk

Cork, representing the South of Ireland, is exhibiting a lively interest in the coming of the A. A. C. of W. Convention to London in 1924. And Cork's voice should count in the expressions of welcome that are flowing in from oversea. For Cork is the third most important city in Ireland, and from its heart there radiates the most important newspapers in the South.

Ireland is the home of a warm hearted race. There is nothing warmer than an Irish welcome. And in the parts which acknowledge Cork as the immediate and nearest centre of activities, you have the true Irish heart beating and pulsing with sentiment.

So, when the South of Ireland newspapers, which include the Cork Examiner, the Cork Evening Echo, and the Cork Weekly Examiner, show their good intent by commanding a special page in this On-to-London edition to give voice to their indorsement of the "London, 1924," project and, in their own words, "stretch their hand across the ocean with an invitation to America," it is an enterprise worthy of note.

Well may they say they are the voice of nearly two million people. They have the confidence of the people in their territory, and in rendering news service to that community, they maintain a London office at 180 Fleet street and a private news wire between London and Cork.

The South of Ireland newspapers are an enterprise that must be counted in any scheme that seeks publicity in Ireland.

"IRELAND WILL BE THERE"

Dublin House Organ Was First to Recognize A. A. C. of W.

The Independent Newspapers, Ltd., of Dublin (with W. T. Brewster as manager) issues a little house organ called STANDING STILL means going back, and with 9 years of steady progress behind us we look forward to still further achievement in the future. We have weathered the worst storm that has hit the trade of Ireland within living memory, and in spite of it we have made steady progress and have held together an organization which we believe to be thoroughly modern and efficient.

¶ We at present conduct the advertising of two big American lines, and would co-operate with any live American Service Agency in the handling of their Irish Appropriation.

¶ For many reasons we welcome the proposal to hold the 1924 Advertising Convention in London. We want to meet American advertising men there and we want them to come to Dublin and meet us; for with the new era of freedom and prosperity that is now opening for the Irish Free State, an intimate interchange of views will redound to our mutual advantage. At any rate a talk between men of the same profession is always likely to suggest a new angle of approach to old problems.

¶ There is an Irish saying that "Far away cows have long horns" so we won't bother you with elegantly phrased descriptions of what we are, what we have done, or what we can do. We want you to come and see for yourself.

¶ What we have learned by hard experience about the Irish Market and its trade possibilities, Irish Media, and the best lines of appeal to the public we will place at the disposal of those who wish to join with us in the cultivation of what is obviously going to be an extremely profitable field in the near future.

Irish Independent Notes. In the latest issue is the following interesting reference to the coming Atlantic City Convention:

It is possible—we hope it is absolutely certain—that the powerful American organization, the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, will assemble in London next year. It should prove to be the most eventful happening in advertising the Old World has ever known. If it comes off, Ireland, of course, will be there. And talking about Ireland, the famous Irish Independent blackthorn stick was presented to the president some years ago at one of this famous club's conventions. As a matter of fact, the first newspaper in Europe to recognize the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in convention assembled was the Irish Independent. We cabled out our wishes for a successful convention—it was at San Francisco, and Mr. Woodward was the president—and we got a very graceful reply. Incidentally, would you blame us for reminding Mr. Woodward that the Irish Independent was not only the first Irish newspaper, but the first newspaper in Europe, to publish net sale figures? We again earnestly hope that our wonderfully progressive American publicity men will make London their rendezvous for 1924. No other city east of the Statue of Liberty could adequately house so impressive an organization of modern business generals.

BI-LINGUAL ADVERTISING

British House Uses Both English and Irish Copy

Among the most consistent national advertisers in Ireland for 20 years past are the proprietors of Bovril. And if there is one thing that the Bovril people have always been distinguished for in their publicity campaign it is—sanity. That is to say, they have always truly sensed the Irish situation so far as advertising is concerned.

Of course, another factor is that this organization has always been represented in Ireland by men who have understood the country inside out. The Irish manager of Bovril for several years past, John Sheridan, is, perhaps, one of the keenest judges of what "goes" in the Irish country that the Bovril Company has ever had. Just now the Bovril advertisements over here are bi-lingual—Irish and English.

It is rather interesting, too, that the first advertisement entirely in Irish ever inserted by a national advertiser was for Bovril. That was nearly 20 years ago, and it was prepared by the present advertisement manager of the "Irish Independent" group of newspapers.

SIMPLE ADS, HIS ADVICE

McJunkin Official Avers Most Copy Says Too Much

Eric Scudder, vice-president of the McJunkin Advertising Agency of Chicago, recently addressed the Chattanooga Ad Club on "Making Advertising Produce Sales." He said in part:

"If you want your advertising to produce sales then make the selling simple. Most manufacturers make too many things, and most manufacturers say too much about the things they make. This causes a confused blur in the mind of the people selling as well as in the single-track mind of the general public.

"The copy prepared for advertising is often filled with too many generalities. The average person does not understand it, and a 'crazy quilt' effect is obtained. The best way to make advertising pay is to get the advertisement down to the fewest words possible and put forth one outstanding reason for a purchase."

New Weekly in Columbus, O.

A new weekly in Columbus, Ohio, the East Side Review, appeared May 4. It is to be published each Friday by A. D. Curfman, business manager of the Westerville (Ohio) Public Opinion. The Review is an eight-page paper, six columns to a page. The first edition was 6,000, the papers being distributed free to every home in the section. The Review is printed in the plant of the Westerville Public Opinion.

INSTITUTIONAL COPY WINS FOR STORES

Principle of Marshall Field Company Successful Advertising Explained by G. R. Schaeffer—Profitable to Omit Comparative Prices

G. R. Schaeffer, advertising manager for the Marshall Field Company, Chicago, during the recent meeting in Cleveland of members of the National Commission of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, told in detail the spirit and motives governing this firm in all its advertising and merchandising. His explanations were supplemented by about 200 lantern slides exemplifying every phase of advertising.

Emphasizing the importance of educational advertising, Mr. Schaeffer said:

"We use our advertising to tell the public about our merchandise, our activities, our policies, our purposes, and our ideals.

"We feel that if our advertising is right it will enable the public to understand just what sort of service we give; just what sort of men are running our business. First of all, it will 'sell' our business as an institution to the public. In its various phases it will build confidence and good will. Surely it is more important for us to sell our business as a whole rather than a few specific items of merchandise. We feel that by winning the confidence and good will of the people on the basis of a real understanding of our policies and ideals, business will naturally flow to our store in great volume. That is why we devote so much space in our advertising to so-called institutional copy.

"We realize that a great many people judge our business very largely by its advertising, often conscientiously, more often unconsciously. Every advertisement seen, whether read or not, produces some sort of impression, The sum total of these impressions is a very considerable part of public opinion. Therefore the appearance of our advertisements is important, just as are the appearance of our store and the personal appearance of our salespeople.

"This is why we employ the best artists, layout men and typographers. And so is the wording of our advertisements important, just as are the statements made by our salespeople. This is why we employ good copy writers and give them a thorough education in our business.

"Broadly speaking, there are two general classifications of general business in general merchandising. The first is the quality class which puts the emphasis of its merchandising upon quality. The second is the price class which puts the emphasis of its merchandising upon price. We have shown to be in the first class, and, from the beginning the goal of our business has been leadership in the quality group.

"It is the incessant endeavor of our merchandising management to maintain our competition on the basis of quality; to sell better quality at the same price, rather than approximately the same quality at a less price. The difference in these two methods, as we see it, is very great. We believe that in the long run quality competition builds up quality and eventually results in the customer getting the best article that can be made, and we believe that price competition tends to destroy quality.

"Now, one of the principal aims of our advertising is to make the public understand the purpose and practice. This is why so much of our copy is devoted to editorial treatment of the quality idea, and is addressed quite as much to our own organization as to the public. And this is why, in our art work, typography, public stock, etc., we seek to make our advertising complement the quality idea.

"It has been said by some that we are among the more successful conservationists of newspaper space. It is true that we have given much concentrated study and effort to this matter during the past year or two, with very gratifying results. We find that often we can cut the lineage of a given advertisement 15, or 20 per cent or even more without impairing its efficiency.

"By cutting down type sizes, by cutting useless words, by trimming illustrations unnecessarily large, and other devices, we often represent one-third to one-half more sections on a page that was formerly our habit. With newspaper lineage at its present prices, it is well worth while to study carefully the matter of type and layout efficiency. There are very few advertisers who can not profitably effect economies in this direction.

"Much of our advertising is planned around special exhibitions or feature events in various sections. It is our aim to have something of special interest or unusual interest going on in the store all the time. Much success has attended our 'book fairs', spring and fall openings, exhibitions of various manufacturing processes, etc."

WELCOME!—
ON TO LONDON IN 1924

AS London's leading Transport Undertaking, we help to voice the word of London. We assure you that your visit will be coupled with useful experience, widespread interest, and happy recollections. London has pledged its word to try and make your visit a memorable one. Frankly, we want you to come.

Your visit will afford you an opportunity of studying the part played by London's Underground in the daily life of its people. This vast organisation is dedicated to the Public Service. It works 1,600 Electric Railway Cars, 3,100 Motor Omnibuses, and 600 Electric Tramway Cars.

In 1922 its Railway Cars carried 325,000,000 passengers, its Motor Omnibuses 924,000,000 passengers, and its Tramway Cars 186,000,000 passengers. A total of 1,435,000,000 for the year.

We look forward to next year's convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World being held in London.

ULSTER CLAIMS CLOSE KINSHIP WITH U. S.

Member of Parliament Points to Record of Northern Ireland Counties as Colonizers, Statesmen and Traders—Seven American Presidents of Scotch-Irish Stock

By THOMAS MOLES, M. P.

(Written exclusively for Editor & Publisher)

THE UNITED STATES and Ulster are intimately associated by the common ties of blood and commercial relationships.

The Ulsterman is the greatest of colonizers, and he has impressed himself deeply upon the history of the United States, as well as upon that of Canada, South Africa and Australia.

Professor Ford of Princeton University in his well known book, "The Scotch-Irish (Ulstermen) in America," points out what a noble contribution Ulster has made to the making of America among whose leading soldiers, statesmen, lawyers, divines and business men are to be found those of Ulster stock or birth.

Whitelaw Reid states that Presidents Andrew Jackson, James K. Polk, James Buchanan, Andrew Johnson, Chester A. Arthur, and William McKinley, were of Ulster ancestry. General Ulysses S. Grant was Scotch-Irish on his mother's side, as were Benjamin Harrison, Grover Cleveland, and Theodore Roosevelt. Woodrow Wilson is Scotch-Irish on both sides.

Mr. Reid gives a long roll of distinguished Americans of Scotch-Irish ancestry. John B. Gibson, Chief Justice of Pennsylvania from 1827 to 1851, is considered "one of the greatest jurists America has produced."

"The Breckinridge family of Kentucky, which has produced numerous clergymen, military officers, lawyers and statesmen, is derived from Alexander Breckinridge who emigrated from Ulster to Pennsylvania in 1728."

John Rutledge, who left Ulster for South Carolina, had two sons, one of whom signed the Declaration of Independence and the other became Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Cyrus McCormick, who invented the reaper and founded a great American industry, was of Ulster stock.

"The history of the leading industries of Pennsylvania is crowded with Scotch-Irish names," continues Professor Ford.

According to Lecky, the historian, "the issue of the Revolutionary War once rested upon the action of the Pennsylvania line, whose privates and non-commissioned officers consisted chiefly of immigrants from the north of Ireland."

Professor Ford points out that Mr. Fiske, the well-known historian, affirms the Scotch-Irish population amounted to one-sixth of the entire population at the time of the Declaration of Independence. "They were all hot for independence, while everywhere else there were streaks of cold or lukewarm feeling."

In "The Winning of the West," President Roosevelt said:

> The dominant strain in their leaders in national expansion was that of the Presbyterian Irish—the Scotch-Irish as they were often called. It is doubtful if we have wholly realized the importance of the part played by that stern and virile people, the Irish, whose preachers taught the creed of Knox and Calvin. The West was won by those who have been rightly called the Roundheads of the South, the same men who before any others declared for American Independence.

WHAT IS ULSTER?

Ulster consists of the six counties of Northern Ireland, the people of which acknowledge the British Constitution and Sovereignty, and exist under the British flag, having their own government for domestic affairs. These six counties are Antrim, Armagh, Down, Fermanagh, Londonderry and Tyrone.

Belfast, Ulster's great port, has one-half of the entire foreign trade of Ireland.

Belfast stands fourth among the ports of the Three Kingdoms.

Belfast possesses five of the largest industrial concerns of their kind in the world. It has the world's largest shipbuilding yard, linen mill, rope works, tobacco factory, and distillery. Around these are clustered a score of subsidiary industries.

For nearly 20 years Belfast held the lowest record for unemployment in the Three Kingdoms. The dislocations that have ensued since the war have temporarily deprived it of that proud distinction.

In 1911 Belfast paid in customs duties and inland revenue $24,575,000, which was more than double the amount provided by the South and West of Ireland. Only London, Liverpool and Bristol surpassed this figure in the Three Kingdoms.

Belfast does one-eighth of the coastwise shipping trade of the United Kingdom.

Over 70 per cent of all Irish export trade and 50 per cent of all shipping trade from Ireland stands to the credit of Belfast.

In 1911 Ulster's exports and imports had a value of $49,937,950. The total for the rest of Ireland in the same year was $33,263,785.

Between the years 1800 and 1900 Belfast multiplied its population by fourteen, a record unrivaled in Great Britain and Ireland.

Its record for pauperism for many years prior to the war was just half the average for Great Britain, and one-third of that for Dublin.

Ulster produces 48 per cent of all Irish oats; 41 per cent of all Irish potatoes; 53 per cent of all Irish fruit, and 95 per cent of all Irish flax.

The statistics of Ireland—value of crops 1918—show that the money value of wheat, oats, barley, potatoes, turnips, mangels, flax, and hay crops was in Ulster $166,404,135, as compared with Leinster $139,756,675. Taking the Ulster figure at per head of population it represents $165 for every man, woman and child in the six counties.

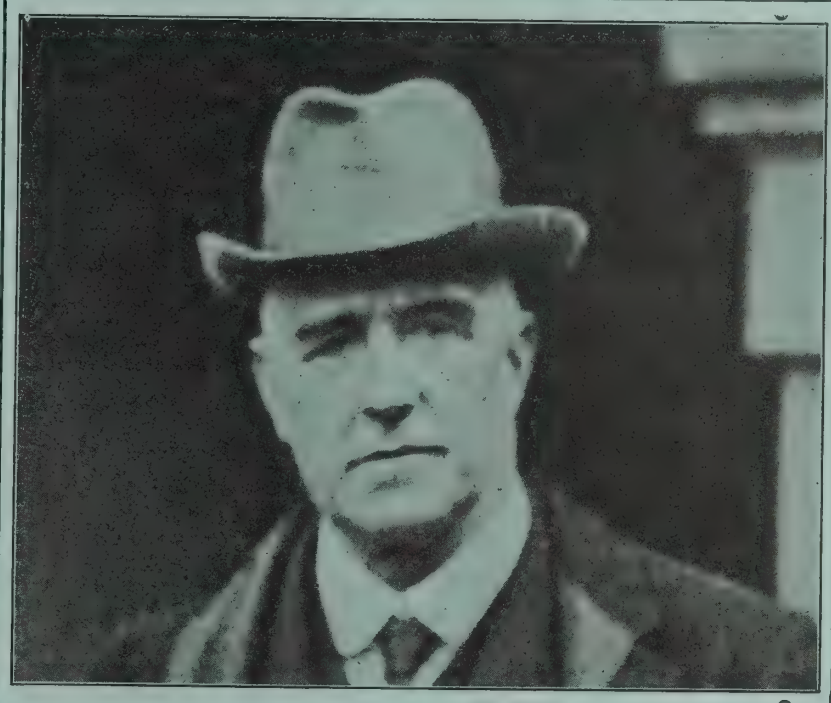
One of the two shipyards in Belfast alone pays out in hard cash as wages annually a sum which equals the ratable valuation of Ulster, and considerably exceeds that of Leinster or any other province.

The Northern Government stock banks having their headquarters in Belfast have on deposit or credit a total of over $301,877,745.

To the Great War Loan the city of Belfast raised $165,000,000.

The workers of Belfast have invested in the Belfast Savings Bank (a Workers' Bank) $11,250,000, apart from substantial lodgments in the Postoffice Savings Bank.

In the Great War Belfast without conscription gave one out of every eight of its people to the fighting forces of Great Britain, a figure not equaled under the voluntary system by any city in the Three Kingdoms.



Out of 82 battalions raised in Ireland, 42 were raised in Ulster. One hundred and forty-five thousand voluntary recruits were raised in Ireland for all branches of the service. Of these Ulster supplied over 75,000 men.

The honors gained by the 36th (Ulster) Division from October, 1915, to the end of the war were:

Victoria Crosses	9
Distinguished Service Order	71
Military Cross	459
Distinguished Conduct Medal	173
Military Medal	1,294
Meritorious Service Medal	118
Foreign (French, Belgium, etc.)	312
Total	2,436

King George in his message to Sir Edward Carson in December, 1918, said: "The men of Ulster have proved how nobly they fight and die."

This is the Ulster we wish Americans to know and appreciate.

"WILL PROMOTE UNDERSTANDING" SIR JAMES CRAIG

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

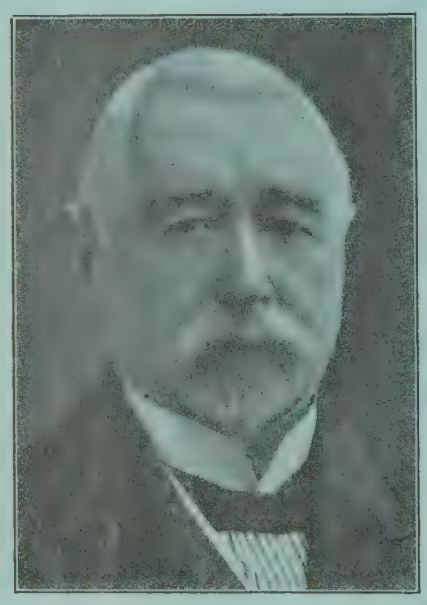
ULSTER is deeply interested in the British invitation to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World and is sending representatives to accompany the powerful delegation representing British industrial, newspaper, and advertising interests which will lay before the forthcoming convention at Atlantic City the many reasons for holding the 1924 convention in London.

I am glad to know that EDITOR & PUBLISHER is issuing a special number in order to emphasize the fact that such a convention in London would promote that business understanding between Great Britain and the U. S. A. which must be the prelude to an expansion of trade between the two great nations, and I sincerely trust that the delegates will make a point of visiting Ulster should they cross the Atlantic in 1924 in order to see for themselves the stability of conditions and the possibility of industrial expansion in this, the youngest of the British Dominions.

They will be most heartily welcomed in Belfast and other industrial centres of Northern Ireland.

JAMES CRAIG.
Prime Minister.



ADVERTISING CLUB OF ULSTER SENDS FOUR DELEGATES TO CONVENTION

Progressive and Constructive Program Arranged for the Year in North Ireland; Sam G. Haughton Is the President

THE ADVERTISING CLUB of Ulster is affiliated with the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World and is sending four delegates in the party, leaving on the Berengaria. The A. C. of Ulster boosts the famous sign of the Red Hand of Ulster every time, counting nothing too much that adds luster to the North in its devotion to England. It numbers close upon 100 members.

The program of the Ulster ad men for this year is progressive and constructive. It follows two distinct courses.

In the first place it is the intention of the council to invite to the monthly meetings business men who can speak with authority upon the part which advertising has played in the building up of a world-wide distribution of given articles and commodities.

Sir Robert H. H. Baird, K. B. E., D. L., managing proprietor of the Belfast Telegraph and allied newspapers, is a typical Ulsterman—vigorous, alert and courageous, although 68 years old. An American once called him "a steam engine in trousers." He set the type for his own first poster in 1870. He was the first newspaper man to install the Creed telegraph system, now on private wires.

The other side of the work is entirely educational, and meetings of the members are being arranged at which close study will be given to the standard works dealing with the various phases of advertising.

These meetings will be conducted by members of the club who have given special attention to certain branches of advertising. In addition a close link is being forged between the advertising club and the art school with the idea of encouraging the students to consider the application of art to commercial illustration.

A cup which was presented to the Ulster Advertising Club by W. S. Crawford will be propably used for the promotion of a competition for the art students at the Municipal College of Technology.

The officers of the Ulster ad men are representative business men of Belfast, drawn from the manufacturing, newspaper, and advertising interests. The roll of active officers is as follows:

President, Sam G. Haughton (of Frazer & Haughton, Ltd.).

Vice-presidents: Sir Robert Baird, K. B. E., D. L. (Belfast Telegraph); Rt. Hon. Samuel Cunningham (Northern Whig); Sir Trevor Henderson, K. B. E. (News-Letter); Robert Clyde, J. P. (White, Tomkins & Courage, Ltd.); William Strain (Wm. Strain & Sons, Ltd.).

Council: William Cassidy (Belfast Telegraph); P. B. Harris (Northern Whig); W. M. Cheves (Norman & Co.); G. H. O. Strick (Davidson & Co., Ltd.); James Dalzell (News-Letter); H. E. Warnock, J. P. (Warnocks, Ltd.); Fred Williams (Gallagher, Ltd.). Honorary treasurer, William Sweeney; honorary secretary, Victor Salter.

The delegates representing Ulster are Sir Robert H. H. Baird, Sam G. Haughton, E. N. Illingworth, and W. H. Webb (Old Bleach Linen Co., Ltd.).

SEND-OFF FOR SIR ROBERT

ON Wednesday, April 26, the president and council of the Advertising Club of Ulster entertained Sir Robert Baird, K. B. E. D. L., at a complimentary dinner in recognition of the services he had rendered that organization by personally conveying the message of its members to the Associated Clubs in the United States of America, inviting the delegates to visit Ulster should the annual convention be held in London in 1924.

A beautifully designed and brightly colored menu card, specially printed in the name of every city where he had visited an advertising club being wrought in attractive lettering round the edges. The crest of the recipient, the monogram of the A. A. C. of the world, the monogram and crest of the Advertising Club of Ulster, and the dates associated with the whole movement were also set forth in equally artistic embroidery.

W. H. Webb, D. L., of Old Bleach Linen Co., Ltd., will be one of the delegates representing the Advertising Club of Ulster at the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in Atlantic City. The delegation will sail on the Berengaria. Mr. Webb's firm is located in Belfast, which as the capital of Ulster is assuming political importance similar to its commercial one.

The secretary (Victor Salter) then announced the receipt of several letters of apology for unavoidable absence.

The president said he had to convey apologies which had been forwarded to himself. The first of these was from W. S. Crawford, London, who had telegraphed:

As vice-president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, and on behalf of John Cheshire, president of the Thirty Club, I am proud to join in honoring your great citizen, Sir Robert Baird. His services to journalism and business are splendid. We welcome his strong arm in the campaign to bring the convention to Britain in 1924.

A congratulatory message was received from Sir James Craig, Premier of Northern Ireland.

The president, in proposing the toast of "Our Guest," which was enthusiastically honored, said it was a very pleasant duty to him to preside at that informal gathering of the members of the Advertising Club of Ulster to pay a humble tribute to the vice-president, Sir Robert Baird, and to acknowledge the very great services he had rendered to the club and to Ulster herself in the work he had done last year and intended to do this year in closely associating Ulster with Great Britain in the invitation that had been extended to the delegates of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to come to Ulster and see things for themselves should they decide to hold next year's convention in London.

When this was mooted, they in Ulster, being so to speak on the fringe of that great organization, and being the only other club connected with the club in London, and in affiliation with that great body, immediately cabled them and asked their delegates to come and visit Ulster, if the great project spoken of happened to mature.

They were just on the eve of the formation of a great mission to represent British interests—and he was told it was already one hundred strong—at the convention in Atlantic City this year. Sir Robert Baird had undertaken to go out to that convention on their behalf and put the invitation of Ulster to the delegates. Those things produced time and labor, and that evening there was very great unity among the members of the Advertising Club of Ulster in asking Sir Robert to come there and accept a little presentation from them. Not only was Sir Robert Baird going out to America but also some other members of their club—he believed among them was Mr. W. H. Webb, D.I.

E. N. Illingworth, London manager of the Belfast Telegraph and kindred papers published by W. & G. Baird, Ltd., is making his first visit to America, in company with his chief, Sir Robert Baird. He has been connected with the London office of the Telegraph for nearly 25 years, for the last eight as manager. Member Association of Advertisement Managers, Aldwych Club and Fleet Street Club.

Sir Robert Baird, K.B.E., in responding, said he thanked the president and council and members of the Advertising Club of Ulster most sincerely for their beautiful gift—which he appreciated very highly, and which he was sure would be greatly treasured by Lady Baird. He thought they had really done too much for him in that respect, for his mission to America had not been altogether on behalf of the Advertising Club of Ulster. He had gone there primarily in a private capacity and at the request of Mr. Haughton and the members he had carried their invitation to the associated clubs in America to visit Ulster should their great convention be held in London next year.

Never, proceeded Sir Robert, in the history of Britain had it been so imperatively necessary that they should expand their foreign trade. Their taxation problems, their employment problems, could all be solved if they could gain fresh markets. They must master the art of selling as they had mastered the art of manufacture. When they sold as well as made Britain's prosperity was secure.

In that connection the importance of holding the 1924 convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley was being increasingly realized by representative British business men. Such a visit of thousands of leading American business men was certain to lead to a great expansion of British and imperial trade. Its importance was so affected by leading business men and men in the advertising profession that already a very large sum had been guaranteed for the entertainment of the American delegation in 1924.

A visit to America could never be paid under better auspices. At the convention the visitors would have the opportunity of meeting thousands of the most alert and most enterprising American business men; and hearing selling problems and difficulties discussed with characteristic American frankness. They would exchange experiences for the benefit of each other. British business men would have much to learn there just as they would have much to teach.

WHAT OF THE COMMERCIAL TIES?

Every steamer built to order of the White Star Line was built in Belfast, the capital of Ulster.

The fleet of the Atlantic Transport Company was built in Belfast.

The fleets of the Holland-America Line and the Dominion Line and the Red Star Line were nearly all built in Belfast.

These great vessels link the old world to the new, and enables the great Anglo-Saxon race to grasp "hands across the sea."

Belfast is the seat and center of the linen trade. The Prime Minister of England declared that in providing the Allied forces with all the aeroplane cloth used in the Great War, "Belfast gave the army its eyes."

A great proportion of the linen output of Ulster goes to America, and vast quantities of American wheat and flour comes to Ulster. The exchange of various other commodities is of mutual advantage.

IN the Century Magazine for September, 1891, Henry Cabot Lodge, writing on "The Distribution of Ability in the United States," said:

I classified the Irish and the Scotch-Irish as two distinct race stocks, and I believe the distinction to be a sound one historically and scientifically. The Scotch-Irish from the North of Ireland, Protestant in religion and chiefly Scotch and English in blood and name, came to this country in large numbers in the Eighteenth Century, while the people of pure Irish stock came scarcely at all during the colonial period, and did not immigrate here largely until the present century was well advanced.

Some of the best blood of the old Ulster flows in the veins of the Americans today. The Ulsterman of today is of precisely the same blood as the old stock, and possesses the qualities of his ancestors. He "fears God and nothing else in this world." Generation after generation he has defended his citizenship, his rights and his faith with the same unflinching courage and tenacity of purpose. He fights for all in which he believes, and will fight for nothing else.

Net Daily Sales in Dublin

The Independent Newspapers have issued net sales certificates for some years. The latest figures of their publications, dated Dec. 31, show the following daily net sales: Irish Independent, 117,891; Evening Herald, 56,151; Weekly and Sunday Independent, 88,649.

While transportation in central London is largely by underground and by the famous busses, the double-decked tram takes care of getting the suburbanite to town.

ULSTER

BRITISH RUBBER GROWERS PUT BOUNCE INTO SALES BY NEWSPAPER CAMPAIGN

Spending $125,000 to Increase Use of Their Wares in United Kingdom, Which Is Far Behind America in Imports of Product

By HERBERT C. RIDOUT

(London Editor, EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

THE DORLAND AGENCY of London have under way a £25,000 advertising campaign conceived by the propaganda department of the Rubber Growers' Association with the object of "developing the uses and utility of rubber and increasing the demand for manufactured rubber goods." At present the plan is in its early stages, but the details of what is proposed have been made available to the manufacturers and distributors of rubber goods with the idea that of the total fund to be expended, the selling ends will guarantee one-half, the other half having already been put up by the producers.

The consumption of rubber in the United States (represented by import figures of 180,000 tons for 1921) is held up as a standard for comparison against the 42,000 tons imported by the United Kingdom. This is emphasized as the one outstanding fact which calls for careful consideration and it is urged that even when due allowance is made for the amount of rubber goods exported by the United States, the fact remains that the consumption of rubber per capita in America is far in excess of the consumption in the United Kingdom.

The greater use of rubber in America can be attributed to a large extent to the popularity of the motor car, but apart from the enormous call for tires, other rubber goods are used on a far larger scale in the United States than in Great Britain.

It is suggested that the American manufacturers and distributors realize the value of appealing to the ultimate consumer and that the result of this policy is reflected in the greater demand for rubber articles. In any case, it is evident that there is ample room for extending the sale of rubber goods in Great Britain by bringing them forcibly to the notice of the general public.

The Rubber Growers' Association may be said to have laid the foundations of this propaganda campaign last year when they offered a number of cash prizes for suggestions for new uses for rubber. These suggestions have been examined by a panel of technical experts and their report is embodied in a series of booklets to be distributed to manufacturers with the object of assisting those who may wish to extend the field of their activities.

The campaign proper commenced with a recent full front page of the Daily Mail, reprints of the page having been distributed to 28,000 retailers of rubber goods throughout the country a few days previously, with supplies of the Rubber Book offered in the advertisement. This Rubber Book is a compendium of the thousand and one uses for rubber wares in the average household and already the 250,000 first edition distributed has created a new demand for little-known rubber goods.

The succeeding advertisements have been arranged to cover every important provincial centre, backed with national morning and Sunday newspapers and London evening papers. The copy will be treated as far as possible in seasonal sequence, but it is expected that this may possibly be affected or governed by the subscribers to the fund. For instance, as the spring season opens, rubber suggestions in sports and athletic goods will be featured, and as summer approaches, hose and other garden requisites, bathing caps, and holiday equipment, etc., will be advertised, while the autumn and winter will be a signal for hot water bottles, draught tubing, overshoes, raincoats, etc., to be featured. In a general way, of course, the everyday needs will be consistently presented; rubber flooring, bathroom equipment, gloves, home medical aids and comforts, furniture and furnishing items, motorcycle and sports accessories, etc.

"Use More Rubber" is the phrase being dinged into retailers and public and while, as yet, time is too early to say that the campaign has completely proved itself, the send-off and its first results indicate that, given full support to the extent planned, the scheme should certainly make rubber sales bounce to ring the bell.

Its wonderful range of Industrial Scientific and purely domestic uses

To go into the story of Rubber, the history of its origin and industrial development here in this page, would be to duplicate the intensely interesting story—"The Romance of Rubber"—told in the Booklet which has just been issued gratis by the Rubber Growers' Association, and which you can get for the asking

Rubber has become too much one of those things taken for granted Rubber is wonderful. It possesses the properties of many materials as well as properties peculiar to itself. There is no substitute for Rubber, although Rubber is a superior substitute for many other materials.

Rubber is used in a great variety of conditions / It may be hard or soft to almost any degree, Rigid or flexible. Rough or smooth. Elastic or plastic, Waterproof or Absorbent. Black or white. Coloured or neutral It will withstand heat or cold—steam or water—acids or alkalis.

There is probably no other of Nature's materials so universal in its properties and possibilities of application. Its full scope of utility to mankind has not yet been realised, although it is now receiving the attention it deserves.

Every householder should know more about Rubber, and the manifold uses to which it can be applied in the home, and it is with this purpose in view that the interesting book entitled "Rubber—The Product of 1001 Purposes" has been compiled.

This Booklet contains 72 pages of the most interesting information on Rubber, and combines a compendium of household uses dealing with several hundred different applications.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE RUBBER BOOK.

It gives the brief story of the "Romance of Rubber." It embodies nearly 200 illustrations of Rubber goods. It tells how to clean, keep and preserve Rubber articles. It tells you how to exploit that new use you thought of. It gives a long list of the lesser known uses. It contains a sample of Rubber Latex Paper. It has taken six months to compile. It has cost several thousand pounds to produce and to print. It is educational, instructive, and it is gratis.

One of the illustrations on this page probably depicts a use of Rubber previously unknown to you. The Rubber Book will indicate others. Procure a copy and learn how Rubber can serve you in the home.

The Rubber Book is obtainable from any local Rubber or general store which displays the page in its window. Look for it. Supplies of the book have been sent to every town in the Kingdom, but a FREE copy will be posted to any address upon a postcard application.

IRISH BANK PROFITS UP

Institutions Increase Gains While British Profits Decline

In view of the general decline in profits shown by British banks for 1922, says the London Daily Express, it is somewhat striking that the majority of Irish banks have shown a reverse tendency. Of six reports hitherto published, four increased their profits as follows:

	1921 £	1922 £
Bank of Ireland.....	513,166	533,943
National Bank.....	265,890	292,514
Munster and Leinster..	172,833	182,637

Broadcast your message through the "Belfast Telegraph"

—All Ulster is listening in—

In Ulster, the richest, the happiest and, by far, the most prosperous of the Irish Provinces, the "Belfast Telegraph" wields an influence unequalled by that of any other journal.

The "Belfast Telegraph" goes daily into every city, town and hamlet in Ulster.

The circulation of the "Belfast Telegraph" is actually greater than the combined circulations of all other Ulster newspapers.

The "Belfast Telegraph" goes home, and its fireside readers—who "read, mark, learn and inwardly digest" the contents of its columns—are at least thrice as numerous as those of all the other journals published in the Province.

National advertisers have long since found that space in the "Belfast Telegraph" is essential to the complete success of any British or Irish advertising campaign.

WHAT AMERICANS MAKE A POINT TO SEE WHEN VISITING LONDON

Tabloid Sketches of Sights and Places Which Hold Special Attraction for Trans-Atlantic Citizens, as Viewed by One of Them in a Two-Year Sojourn

By Otis Peabody Swift

Editorial Note: Mr. Swift was formerly attached to the London Bureau of the New York Tribune and later to the London Bureau of the Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service. The article is not intended as a serious Baedecker treatment of London, but is merely an American's impression of a few of the high spots seen in a hurry.

THE American visitor, about 300,000 strong, takes London by storm each summer season. In the good old summer time all the passersby along the Strand seem to have come from the U. S. A. Hotel lobbies are jammed with home folks, and if the American isn't careful he may find that he has spent the five days allotted to visit London in sitting in some "American Bar" and talking over Minnesota trout fishing with his next door neighbor back home. To avoid this, one might paste the following in his bowler hat, buy a taxi, and look over the attached sights. Sight Number One is—

Your Hotel.

This palatial hostelry will be a slice of the U. S. A. London hotel rooms all look like hotel rooms in Rochester, Cleveland, Chicago, Denver and Pasadena. Good rooms can be had from $2 to $25 a day, an average price being $6. Ham and eggs are usually baked unless one insists on getting "American" ham and eggs. In many hotels each room has an open fire, in which cannel coal is burned, there being no central heating. Service is excellent. Let us now descend to—

The American Bar.

"American Bar!" The hospitable sign greets one on all sides in London. Within one finds the beloved and familiar brass rail. Behind the polished bar stands a genuine antique imported Broadway bartender, busy shaking cocktails. The silvered mixer produces smooth Orange Blossoms, pepful Bronxs, and the driest of dry Martinis. Home is never like this, though it used to be.

But during the war partial prohibition became effective. There are certain closed hours. As I remember bars are only open from 11 a. m. to 2 p. m., and from 5 p. m. to 10:30. The wretch who gets thirsty at 3 p. m. has to wait. The convict who orders a drink at 10:31 p. m. is indignantly refused. Life looks dark and grim at that moment, but—don't despair. Let us now go out into the somber darkness of Piccadilly, grab a night-hawk taxi, and tell the driver we want to go to a—

Night Club.

You see there is a law against selling drinks after 10:30 p. m., but there is no law against private clubs giving drinks to members. Thus numerous Night Clubs have sprung up about Piccadilly (the Times Square of London). These gay clubs again make one feel right at home.

The taxi driver spins up a dark street, halts before the closed door of a shuttered house. Mystic knocks ensue. The door opens a crack. Your friend who knows the ropes whispers, "I'm a member." You are shusshingly admitted, led up a dark stair. There comes an anteroom, a man sitting at a desk.

"My name is Fitzwilliam K. Gilhooley," says your friend Brown. "I wish to present my friend John D. Dough for membership."

"Good," says the chap behind the desk. "I am president, secretary and treasurer of this club. I will put his name up at our next meeting. Meanwhile he has all privileges. One pound, please, for initiation dues."

Yep, it all sounds shockingly familiar.

Once a member, you enter a cabaret-like room. Couples dance; Yankee jazz bands jazz. You may have been terrified by English reserve and hauteur, but you find that, off-stage, they are regular home-town folks, and have enough pep to leave the stranger in the wake after the first ten laps. No liquor is sold here, but the assistant social secretary of the Club may offer you as many drinks as you want. It is traditional that when the secretary offers you a drink you should offer him the equivalent of half a dollar. Quaint, intriguing old world customs, these.

Occasionally the police attend these club meetings, so before they come let's do a bunk (as we say in London for that queer Americanism "Getaway") and visit—

Other Amusements.

You can go to the theatres of an evening, and see most of the plays that will be revamped for the Broadway stage next summer. There are the "music halls," big affairs like the New York Hippodrome, where vaudeville shows are given, and everyone in the audience smokes. You will discover the meaning of the word "pit." The first fifteen rows or so of the orchestra are high priced; behind these, on the orchestra floor, lie the "pit" seats, separated by a railing from the orchestra. They are the cheapest seats in the house. "Queues," or lines of people, start forming sometimes at 5 a. m. outside theatres in order to get first chance at these pit seats.

If you love Shakespeare, don't miss the "Old Vic" theatre over across the Thames, where marvelous productions are given. Mystery, terror, sudden death, fear, ghosts, agony and despair are going by the bushel at the Grand Guignol Theatre, where no plays are given that aren't guaranteed to raise the hair on a billiard ball head. Lots of Americans never see the "Palaise de Danse" at Hammersmith, a real live American type dance hall with two of the best jazz bands in Europe.

They have a funny idea there. If you come without a partner, or want to learn to dance, you find a railed-off portion in one corner of the room where pretty girls, dressed in black uniform, are seated. You decide which girl you'd like to have teach you to dance, you buy a "sixpenny" or 10-cent ticket entitling you to one dance, and then you ask the girl. But if you enjoy dancing with her, and

H. T. HUMPHRIES, general secretary of the Incorporated Society of British Advertisers, Ltd., states:

"I have the honor to advise you that at the annual meeting of this Society, held last evening (April 25), a resolution was unanimously passed welcoming the opportunity of a conference with the American advertisers next year, in London, with the object of improving advertising conditions, methods and results.

"It was further resolved to cable this resolution to Mr. Wilson-Lawrenson."

Pharaoh "arrayed him in vestures of fine linen - -"

THUS does Holy Writ bear witness to the great antiquity of fine linen, and modern discoveries have not only confirmed this evidence but have proved that the Egyptian of Tutankhamen's time and even a thousand years earlier knew and valued this beautiful and useful fabric.

Of Climate and Linen In these modern days the centre of the linen industry is no longer Egypt; it is seated now in Northern Ireland, chiefly on account of the peculiar climate which enables linen to be produced that is unequalled for dazzling pure whiteness and silky softness.

Of How To Tell Linen Real Linen is made from pure flax, and wears about twice as long as cotton. This is because flax fibres are from 12 to 20 inches long; the best cotton fibres are about 1¾ inches. Real linen, with its freshness, its coolness, its cleanness, and its silkiness, is infinitely superior to the cotton and mixture fabrics, so frequently sold as household linen, bed-linen, table linen, and is free from the fluffy surface and wooly threads of the imitation.

Of how to Pleasure a Guest It is a pleasure to your guest and a pride to yourself when all your bed, table, and household napery is of real Irish linen. It gives a feeling of distinction, it creates a pleasant atmosphere.

Of where to obtain linen Robinson & Cleaver have been linen makers for over 50 years, and supply direct to the public from their great Linen Hall at Regent Street, London, and from Donegall Place, Belfast. keep right on, you find that the little ten-cent tickets have cost just $4 for the 40 dances on the program. Let's save that $4, and spend it on a taxi to—

TOWER OF LONDON.

We whirl down Fleet street, across Ludgate Circus, up Ludgate Hill, past St. Paul's Church, and through the ghetto section of Whitechapel. There is material for 435 historical novels in the sights seen on that 15-minute ride. But here is the Tower. It looks (see photo) like a dream castle taken from King Arthur's tales. Built originally as a fortification, used later as a prison for high political prisoners, used at one time as a royal palace, it is now a museum. You cross the moat, dodge the frowning portcullis, avoid the donjon keep, and enter the interior earthworks. Here are the "Beafeaters" in their quaint costumes, hose, knee breeches, red smocks and tri-cornered hats. They are the traditional guardians of the castle. In a tiny stone vault two of them stand guarding the iron grill behind which lie the English Crown Jewels. Piles of crowns, coronets, heaps of pearls, diamonds, rubies, emeralds, glittering gems the size of robins' eggs—all are heaped up there in a little mound worth a baker's dozen of movie stars' salaries. You stare at them, gasp, and go away. Some two weeks later what you have seen begins to dawn on you.

There is also the White Tower, that large square white affair in the picture. This contains one of the finest armor collections in the world and carries arms and lethal weapons of all kinds right through from the ancient Briton's bow and arrow down to the world war gas mask. I recall one weapon in particular, a huge brass cannon, ornamented all over with dragons and pagodas and palm trees, and bearing a plaque: "To the King of England from the King of Mandalay," which shows that there is such a place. In fact even the slightest acquainted with London demonstrates that the English flag flies over ten or twenty countries over on the other side of the world that we had never known existed before. Let's go on to—

LUNCHEON.

Now for a good straight English dinner, roast beef, rare done; Yorkshire pudding, boiled cabbage, half of bitter ale, and apple tart (similar to but oh so different from pie), we'd better go to Simpsons' in the Strand. Many of the American newspaper correspondents in London will be there. Real English food, perfect service and appointments mark the restaurant. They keep the side of beef on a cart of tea table there, and wheel it up by your plate while the carver, in high white cap and white apron, cuts off your piece. You must tip your waiter 10 per cent (and never more anywhere in Europe) of the bill, but at Simpson's an old custom persists of giving this carver a large copper pennies in addition. Of course the first time you go there you do not know this. You omit the ceremony, and the carver's "thank you, sir," is very pointed.

For atmosphere, galore, go to the Cheshire Cheese in Fleet street. It hasn't been changed since America was discovered. The same cobwebs hang from the same beams that Johnson sat under. There the pewter ale mugs have glass bottoms Why? Oh, so that in ye olde dayes ye merrier carouser could look through the bottom of his mug, while taking a deep swig, to see if his neighbor intended to slit his throat. The Cock Tavern on Fleet street is a similar place. Alfred, Lord Tennyson, used to sit at one of the tables in the big little stalls there, and write immortal verse. Henry, the venerable head waiter, will show you the chair. Ask Mary, too, to show you his register book of American visitors. He has asked his favorite American patrons to register there during the past 30 years, and has hundreds of thousands of names, poems, sketches and addresses from the U. S. A. I remember that F. Hopkinson Smith was among the names I saw.

For oysters go to Scott's in Piccadilly. For perfect French cooking look up La Petite Savoyard in Soho, the Washington Square of London. If you want to feel at home, go to the Chinese restaurant in Piccadilly, and find yourself in Mott street. Now that we've eaten, let's take another taxi, and, while the meter clicks up threepences, run around the town.

ZIP GOES THE TAXIMETER!

Ladies and gentlemen, we are now going up the Strand, jammed in behind a line of London buses that look just like Fifth avenue buses except that they are painted red. Here is Trafalgar Square, the Nelson Monument with the four grim stone lions guarding its base. Over the way is the National Gallery, where art masterpieces of every period and school may be seen. Now we turn up Whitehall, past the Horse Guards barracks where we see the troops in their brilliant scarlet uniforms, set off with white buckskin straps, steel cuirasses and steel helmets surmounted by a flowing horsehair mane, a la mediæval history. Here is the little blind alley of Downing street, where we stop a moment before the three-story house at Number 10 to see who is calling on the Premier today. Next comes the Foreign Office, with Scotland Yard opposite it. This isn't a yard at all, but a huge red brick office building, the home of the detective branch of the London police force. Past the Cenotaph, we are on Parliament Square, with the low Gothic pile of the Houses of Parliament (a visit to Commons is one of London's most impressive sights), the high Tower of the "Big Ben" clock, and the twin towers of Westminster Abbey. You'll have to see the Abbey yourself; this taxi is going to cut over past Victoria railroad station, down a side street, and out in front of Buckingham Palace.

There is an epitome of London in this picture of Trafalgar Square, in the center of the hotel district, for, right to left, one may see Trafalgar Buildings, home of the London Bureau of the Chicago Daily News, the Philadelphia Public Ledger, and the English Speaking Union, and Northumberland Avenue on which are the Grand Hotel, Hotel Victoria and Hotel Metropole, all favorites with American visitors. The characteristic "two-wheeler" cabs may be seen on Northumberland Avenue, while a London bus is shown in the center of the picture. The Strand is the street that turns off to the right, while, under one of the great stone lions of the Nelson monument, may be seen a London "bobbie" or policeman on duty and a frock coated silk hatted London lawyer hastening from The Law Courts towards Haymarket.

So on through Hyde Park, under the Admiralty Arch and down the Strand to the hotel again.

Yet we have only begun to see London. It has taken a thousand years to build the city, 1,500 words make but a poor start towards describing its charm, its sights and its lure.

"TOO MUCH PRINTED MATTER"

Harvard Law Dean Thus Comments at Crimson Jubilee

"If half the printed material in the world were destroyed, the world would be better off," declared Dean Warren, of Harvard Law School, on May 12 at the observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Harvard Crimson, one of the best known college dailies.

Prof. Warren claimed that the present tendency of estimating the worth of a man by the amount he writes is wrong, and that he would rather pick a man who has held an office of responsibility than one who has written reams.

"YOUNG MAN'S PROFESSION"

Longer the Experience, Less the Value, Says Brisbane

Speaking before the Nassau Club of Princeton, May 9, Arthur Brisbane declared that newspaper writing was a dangerous profession, because the longer the experience, as a rule, the less the worker's value. This he explained by the statement that a newspaper man loses value when he ceases to feel keenly the thing with which he deals, whereas a doctor is a better operator when he feels no sensation of pity or regret into cutting into human flesh. Mr. Brisbane continued:

"Work done in college helps in newspaper work, since all knowledge sooner or later is found useful in newspaper writing. For money making, newspaper work is better in the beginning, compared to other lines of work, than in the end. A young newspaper man is apt to earn more than an old newspaper man. The old brain does not feel as strongly as the young brain.

"There are exceptions, of course. Some newspaper men are highly paid, getting as much as $100,000 a year, and more. But such salaries are few. There is a constant variety in the work that fascinates and holds one in it. Besides, newspaper men become easily unfitted for other work by late and irregular hours. It is good work, in the beginning, teaching in a short time more about human nature than might be learned in a lifetime in other lines of effort. But it does not offer the ladder of progress found in other professions or businesses."

$100,000 FOR LANGUAGE CHAIR

Mrs. Beckman's Gift Announced Before San Francisco Penwomen

At a luncheon of the San Francisco branch, League of American Penwoman, Mrs. William Beckman, authoress and world traveler, announced she had given $100,000 to endow a chair of English Language and Literature at the University of California. The gift was in memory of Mrs. Beckman's late husband, William Beckman.

Mrs. William Harold Wilson retired as president of the league, being succeeded by Mrs. Esther Birdsall Darling. Other officers elected were: first vice president, Mrs. Prentiss Cobb Hale; second vice president, Mrs. Frederick Colburn; corresponding secretary, Miss Nancy Buckley; historian, Mrs. Vermille de Witt Warr; librarian, Mrs. Fay Van Orden Jackson; auditor, Mrs. L. A. Pfeffer; board of directors, Dr. Aurelia Henry Reinhardt, Mrs. Annette Abbott Adams, Miss Geneve Shaffer, Mrs. Martial Davoust, Mrs. Ella Sexton, Miss Olive Hulse.

CENSOR STAYS IN RUSSIA

But He Hits Only at Untruth, Not at Opinion, Says Litvinoff

Assurances were given to various Russian correspondents May 8 by Maxim Litvinoff, Assistant Foreign Minister of the Soviets, that there was no censorship on opinion, and that the censorship was confined solely to eliminating unverified rumors, or biased or untruthful reporting of alleged facts.

The correspondents called on M. Litvinoff and suggested the complete lifting of the censorship against foreign correspondents in Moscow, contending that such censorship invariably reacted against Russia and had the effect of discrediting in a measure all Moscow dispatches.

M. Litvinoff replied that, as Russia was still in a state of semi-war and surrounded by enemies, he did not think the Government could see its way to abandon the censorship entirely.

PASTOR URGES ADVERTISING

Says Church Should Pay for All the Publicity It Gets

Dr. E. V. Stivers, pastor of the First Christian Church at Eugene, Ore., said at the recent conference of newspaper men in that city:

"I advocate paid advertising for the church. I am in opposition to the doctrine that the old-time religion is good enough, especially as concerns publicity methods. The church should be put on a business foundation, and should pay for all the publicity it gets—and it should use paid space in large quantities."

The Bulletin Building
N. E. cor. City Hall Square

The Philadelphia Bulletin's newspaper printing plant is the largest in the United States

The Bulletin is housed in The Bulletin Building, with ten stories and two basements, at the northeast corner of City Hall Square, and in the Bulletin Annex, of seven stories and two basements, at the southwest corner of Juniper and Arch Streets.

The Bulletin's battery of twelve octuple and nine decuple high-speed perfecting printing presses is capable of an output of 300,000 copies of The Bulletin per hour.

Builders are now at work erecting an addition to The Bulletin Annex Building that will double its size.

To print a single day's issue of The Bulletin—half a million copies—requires about 200 tons of newsprint paper (this is equivalent to almost eight railroad freight car loads), and consumes more than 6,000 pounds of ink daily.

About 1,400 people, including editors, reporters, compositors, printers, clerks and other workers, exclusive of carriers, news-boys and news-dealers, are employed daily in the production of The Bulletin.

Its delivery fleet of one hundred motor trucks and wagons travels more than 600,000 miles a year in hauling The Bulletin to more than 8,000 distributors, who carry it into a half million homes in Philadelphia, Camden and suburbs every day.

The circulation of The Philadelphia Bulletin is larger than that of any other daily or Sunday newspaper published in the state of Pennsylvania or between New York and Chicago, and is one of the largest in America.

"In Philadelphia nearly everybody reads The Bulletin"

U. S. Post Office report of net paid average circulation for six months ending March 31, 1923—505,098 copies a day.

WELCOME BRITONS!

By F. A. WILSON-LAWRENSON
Chairman Special Committee on London 1924 Convention Invitation Associated Advertising Clubs of the World

IT is not for any man to attempt to foretell any action that may be taken by the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at Atlantic City in June, but one may at least express a hope; and my hope is that the convention will vote unanimously to accept that invitation to hold the 1924 convention in London, which one hundred delegates of the Thirty Club of London, together with a distinguished company of British business men, publicists and advertisers are now on their way to present.

F. A. Wilson-Lawrenson

There are many reasons why, in my opinion, this whole-hearted invitation should be accepted. Some of the reasons may be regarded as purely selfish ones, among them, I think we may place the fact that such a visit to Great Britain under such auspices would do a very great deal to broaden our business horizons—and perhaps our social horizons, too; would be a very liberal education in the advertising methods, hopes, aspirations and ideals of the world at large, and would give us all a wider viewpoint and a closer relationship with peoples with whom our business affiliations are increasing every year.

I tried, in my report of my observations as a special delegate to Great Britain, to make those interested see how very much the British have taken to heart the possibilities of increased friendship and goodwill springing from the commingling of the business interests of the two great English-speaking nations. I found that practically every newspaper publisher in England was in hearty accord with the idea and, indeed, it was two of England's leading newspaper proprietors who came forward, without any solicitation, and volunteered subscriptions of $75,000 toward a fund for the proper entertainment of our American delegates if they should decide to come over.

Of the enthusiasm of the British for the acceptance of their invitation there can be no possible doubt. They feel, I am sure, that nothing but mutual advantage can come from a chance to compare each other's work in advertising and merchandising; they realize that in advanced methods of advertising there is much they may learn from America and, in all modesty they hope that they have some ideas in the matter of world-trade that might, in American hands, be made of greater use to the world.

And for my part, I see in such a visit considerable access of dignity and prestige to the advertising profession to which we are all devoted. By such a visit I seem to see that the eyes of the world will be, for the time of the London convention, focussed on what the advertising men of the world are doing. Business everywhere will be brought to see what a powerful weapon, in the economics of business, advertising has become; how it is in effect, a universal message which translated into all languages and circulated in all countries, shows how mutually interdependent we are on each other, and how great is the need for amity and clear understanding of each other's purposes, and how, no matter what distance in miles may divide us, the magic good-will of commerce binds us all together.

Within the past two or three years, advertising in the United States has been rising steadily in the estimation of all the people. Manufacturer and merchant, creator and consumer alike have been brought to see that advertising has done much to change us from the paths of cut-throat competition into the pleasanter roads of healthy co-operation.

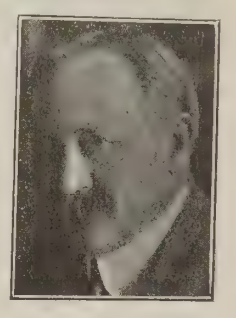
Advertising has won its rightful position as a reliable guide to the markets of the world; it has increased mightily in artistry and artisanship, in dignity and in force, and it has acquired an editorial significance that is not without its influence on business conditions. And with the completion of the new metropolitan home of the New York Advertising Club, a building with physical beauties that rank high in a city of beautiful clubs and with ideals second to none, we may be certain that the high place advertising has won will, through all the future years, be stoutly maintained.

I can conceive of nothing that will so advertise advertising in the highest and most dignified way as the carrying of our 1924 convention to London. Everything has been done to make such a move not only possible, but desirable. Such arrangements have been made as will make the voyage over and back hardly more costly for delegates, no matter where their homes, than our usual annual visit to some American city.

And, finally, and dropping for a moment all considerations of self-interest and material advantage to be gained, I can see that the acceptance of this earnest and well-meant invitation means a magnificent gesture of friendship and goodwill.

GREETINGS FROM PRESIDENT HOLLAND of the A. A. C. of W.

WE are mindful of the high importance of the mission that brings the distinguished delegates from Great Britain to the on-coming Atlantic City Convention. No other preceding Convention of the A. A. C. of W. has been so honored. The out-pouring of good-will from the hearts of American advertising men and women will exceed the import of any words I could write—spontaneously and justly so. The world waits for the developments of tomorrow that must guarantee the future of civilization. The call to the business men of America and Great Britain was never so urgent, and as in the past, the answer will not be disappointing. We of America and you of Great Britain can, as we must, work together. You have something for us, as we have for you, and we welcome you whole-heartedly in the spirit to give, knowing your hearts meet ours in the same spirit—the spirit of blood kinship manifested so grandly and nobly by the exemplary 107 years of unbroken and inspiring peace between us.



If the Convention, in its wisdom decides to go to London in 1924, there will be many to rejoice, unstintedly, in every quarter of America. If not, you will return to your own shores with the assurance that your coming has been a forward step for good whose significance will not have been lost when our love will be in the hearts of future generations.

LOU E. HOLLAND.

IN SPIRIT OF KINSHIP

OUR heartiest welcome to our kin from overseas.

They are inheritors of the great tradition of Caxton—and so are we. When the first English printer brought back with him from Bruges the new art of printing, he bore the divine fire that touched the old Norman and Saxon England and transformed it into Modern Britain. And in the encompassing family circle, held together by a common English speech, America is an elder sister, "mistress in her own house," but proud of the great common inheritance.

Herbert S. Houston

It is in that spirit of kinship that, as Chairman of the National Reception Committee, I extend a warm hand of greeting to every member of the British delegation to the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

As I stretch it forth toward the oncoming "Berengaria" in these friendly English type of Caxton, I recall vividly my own recollections as I left Southampton last July on the same big ship. As the friendly shores faded, the picture filled my mind's eye of all the kindnesses shown me in the preceding weeks—the dinner of the Thirty Club, on the eve of Higham's departure for Milwaukee, the staunch goodness of John Cheshire, as English through and through as his name, the beautiful gardens of hospitable Jack Akerman at Putney on the Hill, the quaint old Sussex house of Murray Allison, with its low beams, hard by the swelling Downs and their far view of the sea, the Knightly Vernon, the very soul of courtesy, keen Wareham Smith (why didn't he come along?), Sir William Berry and his brother Gomer, who had risen from modest candles, in my first visit to London years ago, to great publishing torches, Lord Burnham and his newspaper, of world-wide influence, Agnew of "Punch," quietly bearing his part of that great British institution, the tireless dynamo, whose electric energy alas! is stilled, Lord Northcliffe—what a roster of friends and forces, conservators and distributors all, of the printed word that has made great the English-speaking peoples. And to think that most of them soon are to be our guests and that we can extend to them some of the boundless hospitality they have always extended to us—it is a thought as lovely and fragrant as an English rose. And now the shores fade in the mists—for I'm still on the "Berengaria" last July, in memory—and then, as if by some subtle alchemy of the air, the broad, kindly face of Crawford takes form, a face that, whether dour or shining, is the trade-mark of a true Scottish heart that always finds ways to do endless things, little and big, to help the world along.

But here is the "Berengaria" coming up New York harbor on May 30 or June 1 of this very year. We all wave a great, broad greeting of welcome; and, besides, each and every one of us utters the personal welcome of our forefathers, "for you the latchstring hangs out."

HERBERT S. HOUSTON,
Chairman of the National Reception Committee.

UNDERSTANDING THROUGH ASSOCIATION

TO accord a welcome on behalf of the American Newspaper Publishers Association to the members of the British delegation to the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs is a pleasure I should not willingly forego.

PAUL PATTERSON

Advertising is always the lubricant of trade and sometimes the motive power. The men who have made it their profession can do much good in the present international situation.

Closer intercourse means fewer misunderstandings and steady growth in the very pleasant and cordial relations now existing between England and the United States.

It is a great pleasure indeed to welcome the British delegation to this convention.

PAUL PATTERSON,
President, American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

TESTIMONIAL TO ADVERTISING

AMERICAN advertisers welcome the visitors from overseas. We are honored by their coming. The whole advertising fraternity, I believe, well may feel gratified by the coming of so large a delegation from England; to me it seems that the size of the delegation testifies more convincingly than could anything else to the importance to which advertising has grown in modern business. Advertising morale and advertising method will benefit, surely and immeasurably, from this convergence of advertising's best minds.

G. B. SHARPE

ADVERTISING ESSENTIALS

Sincerity and Plausibility Are Absolutely Vital to Success

According to John Lee Mahin, president of the Federal Advertising Agency of New York, who addressed the St. Paul Town Criers' Club recently, the ten essentials of good advertising have been concentrated to two—sincerity and plausibility.

"You must," he said, "have the goods and describe them truthfully to build up permanent success. It is faith on the part of readers which has made possible the tremendous expenditures on advertising. But you must tell the truth so it will seem self-apparent to the reader. In the effort to make truth plausible, advertising must teach, and it has become a wonderful educational force."

WE WANT YOU TO WIN

THE Advertising Club of Atlantic City cordially welcomes the British delegation to the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, to be held in this city.

This will be by far the greatest gathering of advertising men, that has ever come together at any convention. It will be a meeting with a real business purpose.

A most comprehensive, and constructive program has been arranged, which will unfold much of our experiences and will help the individual with his problems. From your many bounteous invitations to come to London in 1924 there should be but one answer. And it is my sincere wish that you will not be disappointed.

LEONARD D. ALGAR,
President of the Advertising Club of Atlantic City.

BETTER BOOKS FOR FUTURE

Methodist Concern Finds Growing Sense of Responsibility to Rising Generation

A growing "sense of responsibility to the rising generation is prompting the publication of more books of the better type," according to the report of the Methodist Book Concern for the past fiscal year.

The report has just been made public by Robert H. Hughes, of Chicago, and Dr. John H. Race, of Cincinnati and New York, publishing agents. Total sales in the United States were given as $5,035,256.01, an increase of $15,666.50 over last year's sales and within $4,718.50 of 1920's sales—the largest in the history of the concern. Owing to increased business, the present building in Bush street, Chicago, occupied by the concern, is to be sold, the report reveals, and a new building at least twice as large is to be erected three blocks east. The present building is four stories high.

The Southwestern Christian Advocate, one of the concern's numerous publications, will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary in July. The Northwestern—another—has just passed its seventieth anniversary and in less than two years the Christian Advocate—a third—will celebrate its centennial.

"UNIQUE IDEA" PASSÉ

Vividness Greatest Advertising Force, Says St. Paul Professor

Prof. C. F. Echterbecker, of Hamline University, St. Paul, in an address to the St. Paul Town Criers' Club on "The Psychology of Advertising," May 4, declared that the "Something different," "Something unique" idea in advertising is passé and ineffective.

"Vividness, happily coupled with so-called 'emotional congruity,' is perhaps the greatest force in effective advertising," said he. "It has been shown conclusively that men naturally are attracted more by advertised commodities that appeal to them. Men know and recognize the advertising of certain makes of automobiles and tobaccos and of sports of various kinds, while women have a definite foible for perfumes, styles, clothes, etc., and children are immediately attracted by the advertisement with the picture of a child in it.

"A slogan or trade-mark, strictly adhered to and carried before the public over a long period of time, is invariably an attention-getter that sticks."

MID-WEEK PUBLICATIONS

Week-end Too Late for Rural Readers, South Dakota Finding

South Dakota papers are tending more and more toward mid-week publication rather than at the week-end.

Publishers find that the edition must be put in the mails not later than Thursday, if the advertised Saturday bargains are to be of any value to rural readers.

CHICAGO WANTS YOU

WILL you be so kind as to extend to the members of the British Delegation to the forthcoming Advertising Clubs of the World Convention a cordial greeting and sincere welcome on behalf of the Newspaper Representatives' Association of Chicago.

F. E. CRAWFORD

Many of our members expect to attend that convention and we hope to be fortunate enough to meet personally our co-workers in advertising activities from abroad.

We should like to call the attention of our British co-workers to the desirability of extending their itinerary to take in Chicago before they return home and should they decide to come here, we shall be glad to join with other organizations in extending the proper welcome to them.

NEWSPAPER REPRESENTATIVES ASSN. OF CHICAGO,

GREETINGS TO PAN-AMERICANS

Pres. Harding Sends Message to Press in Session at Santiago, Chile

The menu of the luncheon which the American Ambassador, William M. Collier, gave recently to the correspondents attending the Pan-American Conference, at Santiago, Chile, bore the reproduction of a photograph of President Harding at work in the composing room of the Marion Star. Beneath appeared the following message from the President:

"With printer, publisher and editor, salutations from the Republic of the United States to the press of the Latin-American Republics, with all good will and good wishes for an ever enduring friendship."

In reply the Ambassador said: "I rejoice that the papers of South America are taking the news service of the press associations of my country. I rejoice in the rapidly increasing interest in the United States in everything related to South and Central America, Mexico and the Caribbean Islands."

NEWSPAPERS AS TEXTBOOKS

Cleveland Schools Find Many Lines of Study in Dailies

Cleveland newspapers are being used as textbooks in reading in the public schools of that city, according to Miss Laura A. Gilmore, a district supervisor. The effect of reading news has almost become a separate course of study to teach pupils to distinguish between important and trivial matters in news columns. Editorials, fashion pictures, want ads, women's page, features—these all are in the grist of the new "educational mill." There is much interest in the weather reports.

"The pupils have a sporting interest in weather news," Miss Gilmore said. "They like to watch how close the official forecaster will hit the mark. Another thing they like is the miscellaneous item—such as that London has 3,576 taxicab drivers, which are sometimes used as fillers at the bottom of columns. The news stories are used to furnish information for current events. Dramatic criticism is read to show that although two critics may have different views, both may be right. Prices given in advertisements are often used as a basis for calculations in arithmetic.

"I recall one day when there was a flaunting headline in a newspaper on a murder story. The teacher was very tactful about the story. She simply told the class to look at the headlines and to decide whether they thought they would profit by reading the story. The pupils decided it was not of interest and passed it up for other news matter.

"I read the murder story, although the pupils did not."

Articles containing news about Mayor Fred Kohler are in much demand, Miss Gilmore said. Among pupils of the sixth grade because one of a class sells papers near the city hall and the mayor is a frequent customer of the boy.

The papers used are the Press and News, evening papers, and the Plain Dealer and the Times-Commercial, morning papers.

DUTY OF DRAMATIC CRITICS

Must Tell Truth About Shows, Says Columbus Producer

"Dramatic criticism should not be merely free publicity for theater managers," declared J. Clarence Sullivant, Columbus dramatic critic and producer, speaking before journalism students at Ohio State University recently. "It should reflect unfavorable as well as favorable comment on theatrical productions.

"Theater managers do not want favorable comment at all times. If favorable comment is given on a poor entertainment, the public will lose confidence and pay no attention to newspaper write-ups. When a really good play appears, favorable comment loses its value if all are treated in the same manner.

"The only people who desire favorable comment at all times are traveling press agents of a show.

"Dramatic critics have a clear-cut duty. Dramatic art without criticism would still be dramatic art—but a picture gallery with doors locked would still be a picture gallery.

"The question before critics is, 'Should the review be reportorial or analytical?' It should be both. It should be reportorial, but should reflect critical assent or dissent. Reasons for criticism must be given. Reaction of the audience must also be given. A critic gives his own personal ideas, but the reaction of the audience is a much safer guide."

EARLY BORDER PUBLICATIONS

First Mexican Paper, in Book Form, in Texas Archives

Particular interest is shown by the Department of American History of the University of Texas in the early newspapers of the United States, Texas and Mexico. The archives contain a large collection of such papers.

The first Mexican newspaper is in book form, and is entitled Gazeta de Mexico. Here also is the first Texas novel, printed in the French language, on a Paris press. It is entitled "L'heroine du Texas." The earliest successful newspaper in Texas was the Texas Gazette, published in 1829 by Godwin Cotton Brown, who also published the first book in Texas, a volume dealing with the legal aspect of the colonization of Stephen F. Austin.

MANUFACTURERS OFTEN OVERLOOK MARKET AROUND THE CORNER

The Story of How California Apple Men Met Big Sales Problem and Vastly Increased Consumption of Fruit at Home by Judicious Advertising Campaign

By HAMMOND EDWARD FRANKLIN

CULTIVATING THE MARKET just around the corner is often overlooked by manufacturers whose eyes are so intent on far-away fields that they are blind to real opportunities within reasonably easy reach.

Green pastures a long way off frequently do look enticing to the view. And sometimes it pays a manufacturer to go after such a market first, but in many cases he would do better to tackle the obvious close at hand, within economical shipping distance and readily supervised personally so the maximum returns may be garnered from minimum advertising expenditure.

How many national advertisers have not built up the sale of their product in their home town, county, State and region! A New England producer of cane and maple syrup has found his biggest market is in California, but that means expensive cross-country transportation. On the other hand, fruit from the western coast comes all the way from the Pacific Coast to the East and sells in preference to Eastern products.

Where is the city of most fastidious dressers? It isn't New York or Chicago, a shoe dressing manufacturer told me the other day, but Butte, Mont., where the inhabitants give more care to being in style than in many a metropolis. I cannot vouch for the accuracy of the statement, but it is best on his own sales at any rate, for the natives in Butte use more of his shoe polish in proportion to population than any other city.

A group of California folks were up against a tough situation on the marketing of their apples. It looked as though they were going to lose considerable money. Instead of trying to sell to markets in the eastern United States, they decided to "sell their neighbors," the residents of convenient cities and do it through newspaper advertising.

"In August of last year, the representative business men in Watsonville, Cal., through the Chamber of Commerce, recognized the fact that apple growers in their district were facing a mighty difficult situation," A. F. A. Stedem, of the Honig-Cooper Company, San Francisco, which has charge of the advertising, stated.

"Packers had found it almost impossible to interest Eastern buyers at any price, and with an expected large crop of northern apples coming into the State, they recognized also that they were going to have trouble selling their apples right at home.

"With the co-operation of this agency, a plan for concentrating sales efforts on one or two markets was prepared, and it was decided to make these efforts in San Francisco, Oakland and the Bay territory. The theory was that the crop of Bellflower apples could be sold profitably right in the State—in the 'market next door.'

"Los Angeles had always been a receptive market, and no great difficulty was anticipated in getting a good call from there. It was believed that if San Francisco could be made to absorb a fair proportion of the crop, it would insure the prices in Los Angeles and also prevent any glut either in Los Angeles or any of the interior markets.

"There was a rather unusual feature about this campaign in that the growers of apples in the Pajaro Valley were the smallest contributors. The plan was initiated and carried through by the Parajo Valley Chamber of Commerce at Watsonville. The advertising appropriation was made purely on a basis of what would be necessary to produce a representative and sufficiently strong campaign to arouse both consumer and dealer interest in San Francisco and Oakland.

"The copy appeal was based on the three virtues of Bellflower apples—'Good lookers, good eaters, good cookers.' Stress was laid on the nearness of the Pajaro Valley to San Francisco, which made it possible to obtain these apples within a very short time of their being picked.

"A little over 400 inches of space was used, concentrated in an eight weeks' period, starting about the middle of September. In San Francisco, the Examiner, Chronicle, Call, and Bulletin were used, and in Oakland the Oakland Tribune, supported by the Berkeley Gazette, and by the Daily Californian, the daily paper of the University of Chicago.

"We depended entirely on the merchandising departments of these papers to distribute signs for windows and to obtain the co-operation of the grocers in making display of the fruit in order to cash in on the advertising. The Daily Californian was used because just at that time of year (as is the case with most college papers) there was a large staff of men, all striving for permanent places. These fellows merchandised the advertising to the various fraternity houses, boarding houses, hotels and stores that are patronized by the college people."

The opening advertisement was entitled, "The best all around apple." A huge tempting apple was shown, with smaller pictures of a dish heaped with Bellflower apples, a youngster munching one and a housewife cooking with some. The copy said:

"Good to look at! Good to eat! Good to cook with! See them in market today. Their irresistible, golden glow will invite you to buy.

"The Valley of Pajaro, only 100 miles away, is the home of Bellflowers. As fast as they are picked they are shipped here so that none of their goodness is lost in storage or transportation.

"Insist on getting fancy Bellflowers. Better get a box—the price will suit you—and you'll use them quickly. Get them at your grocer's."

At the side were printed recipes for coddled apples—the name is rather intriguing—and apple dumplings.

Another advertisement emphasized the idea of "selling the market nearby." "Picked yesterday, eaten today, none of the flavor is lost on the way," chanted the headline above a map showing Watsonville in a straight truck line from San Francisco, with a mammoth apple superimposed.

The copy said:

"Just 100 miles away is the Valley of Pajaro—the home of the famous all around Bellflower apples. Direct from the trees they come to you with all their golden glow and goodness.

"To depend upon them for every apple purpose is good economy. For Bellflowers meet every apple requirement. Perfect in appearance. Delicious to eat. Splendid to cook with.

"Ask for fancy Bellflower Apples today. Your grocer or fruitman has them. It will pay you to get a box—the price is pleasingly low."

A dessert, "Apple Betty," was appended

The three big issues on which the consumer was urged to buy—"good looks, good eaters, good cookers"—were made the subject of a third piece of copy.

"Perfect through and through" was the key thought behind another advertisement, which continued:

"You can depend upon the thorough goodness of Bellflower apples. From skin to core they are perfect for eating or for cooking. The reason? They come from Pajaro Valley which is ideally adapted for raising Bellflower Apples. And they are shipped as fast as they are harvested so they can reach you in the same condition as if you picked them yourself. Whether you buy a dozen or a box—every one will be a good one.

"Insist on fancy Bellflowers. Your grocer has them."

Smaller space was used to present the apples from various angles.

What were the results of the campaign?

"'It was impossible, owing to the fact that many boxes were shipped in by truck, to determine just what volume of increase was obtained,' Mr. Stedem stated in answer to this question. But the fact the growers obtained an average of from 90 cents to $1 as against the expected price of 65 cents is sufficient evidence of the success of the advertising.

"Another evidence of its success is the fact that a movement is now under way, fostered by the Parajo Valley Chamber of Commerce at Watsonville, to form an organization of growers and packers of the valley. We are assisting the Chamber of Commerce in the work and, if the plan goes through, another co-operative marketing organization in California will have become a fact."

Newspaper advertising is usually the medium which can extract sales from overlooked markets, whether close by or far off.

Can't you hear him saying: "There ain't goin' to be no core!"

PALPABLE PRICE ERROR NO REASON FOR GIFT

St. Louis Store Sees No Reason to Sell $145 Wraps for $1.45 Because of Typographical Mistake

A compositor's error in the advertisement of Stix, Baer & Fuller, carried by the St. Louis Globe-Democrat May 8 caused several of the store's customers to demand that $145 evening wraps be sold them for $1.45. L. Blumenstock, manager of advertising and sales for Stix, Baer & Fuller, said the demands were refused on the grounds that the price quoted in the advertisement was obviously an error. He continued:

"If the price had been misquoted as $45, we probably would have met the demands. The mistake would then not have been so obvious, and the customer would have had the right to assume that any garment of the character of the ones involved might be sold at that price.

"We have had several instances in the course of our experience in which we have made good the mistakes in advertisements. In one case, the descriptions of dining room suites became mixed, and a $398 suite was priced at $98.50. A woman who had evidently been looking at the set immediately asked for it at that price, and it was sold to her. Not only did we accept the loss involved but we polished the furniture, delivered it to her and allowed an extension of time on the payment, just as though we were making a profit on a sale.

"On another occasion, a fur piece placed on sale at $1,000 and misquoted at $100 was sold at the erroneous price.

"It has always been the policy of this house to deal fairly with our customers—and we expect the same spirit of fairness from them. If we overcharge for a purchase we make good the overcharge, but if we fail to charge for a purchase we expect the customer to call our attention to the error.

"But the price of $1.45 for the evening wrap advertised Tuesday is ridiculous, as is attested by the fact that we sold many of the wraps at the correct sale price of $145.

"Fortunately, these mistakes in prices are few and far between, but they reveal that there are a few persons who are always ready to take advantage of the situation—and they think they are wrongfully treated because we refuse to meet their obviously unjust demands.

"In this case, the responsibility rests with the newspaper, but it would be absolute injustice for us to allow them to impose a penalty on the newspaper by granting their unreasonable demands."

ST. LOUIS STAR STOPS ITS SUNDAY

Not Room for 3 Papers, It Declares, on Returning to Six-Day Basis

The St. Louis Star issued its last Sunday edition May 13, returning to a six-day evening basis after almost two years' publication of a Sunday issue. The announcement in the May 13 issue, explaining the suspension, stated in part:

"In these two years the citizenship of St. Louis has responded handsomely to the Star's new enterprise. It has been rewarded with a steadily increasing circulation, until today it has well over 100,000. There has been an increase of about 10,000 in its circulation in the last three months. The advertising patronage, too, has been gratifying, but not sufficient to make the Sunday issue as handsome and effective as the owners have desired.

"Careful investigation in the last few months has convinced the owners of the Star that there are few cities in the United States large enough to support three Sunday papers to such an extent as to insure their being creditable and profitable. Cities much larger than St. Louis could be named where only two Sunday papers are sources of profit to their owners. In fact, there are only two or three of the very largest cities in this country where more than two Sunday issues have been successful in all senses.

"In stopping its Sunday issue and in returning to a six-day evening publication, the Star rejoins the ranks of the most successful and useful dailies in the whole country.

"The direct and immediate result of this step on the part of the St. Louis Star will be a benefit to the 110,000 patrons of the six-day evening issue, and to the public at large also. That is the prime purpose of the management. There will logically be a concentration upon the evening issue of all the brains, energy, resources and newspaper skill which the ownership and management of the Star possess.

"The quality of the six-day evening issue will be improved in every way dictated by good judgment and ripe experience."

ROGERS COUNTERS RUSSELL'S CHARGES WITH BATTALION OF STATISTICS

Newspaper Growth Has Far Outstripped Population Increases in Large Cities Since 1896 and Recent History Demonstrates Freedom of Press from Advertiser Control.

"IT is regrettable that an experienced newspaper man like Charles E. Russell should indulge his propensity for mere writing to bring together so loose a group of misinformation and misapprehension regarding newspapers as he did in last week's EDITOR & PUBLISHER," stated Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, this week.

"Russell's whole statement is so inaccurate as to justify no serious rejoinder. Regarding matters of opinion, no one will quarrel with him. If he thinks 'lopsided' civilization and our newspapers have gone to the bow-wows because he is out of joint with affairs, that is his misfortune," continued Mr. Rogers.

"I shall not attempt to answer all of Mr. Russell's inaccuracies, but merely point out a few of them. To illustrate let us take a sample or two under consideration:

> "'The population increases; the number of potential readers increases; the number of newspapers, the influence of newspapers and the respect in which newspapers are held, diminish.
> "'In Chicago, population close to 3,000,000, there are two morning newspapers; twenty-five years ago, population 1,500,000, there were seven. New York has five. My memory goes back to a time when with half as many people we had twice as many morning newspapers.'

"Let us look at the facts. In Chicago in 1896 there were five morning newspapers with a total daily sale of 397,869; today there are two with a daily sale of 888,376, an increase of 491,000 or 123 per cent as contrasted with an increase of 59 per cent in population.

"In 1896 four of the five then existing morning newspapers were operated at heavy loss made up in three cases by an angel with interests to serve and in the fourth by an attempt to establish a clean independent morning newspaper by Victor F. Lawson, the owner of the Chicago Daily News.

"The total circulation of all Chicago daily newspapers in 1896 was 706,688 as compared with 1,808,149 in 1922, a gain of 1,101,171 or 156 per cent as compared with increase in population from 1,698,575 to 2,701,705 according to census figures, 1900 and 1920, a gain of 59 per cent.

"And yet, according to Russell our newspapers have not kept pace with population increases and have lost influence. If Russell had inquired regarding production costs, he would realize how inaccurate his suggestion that our great newspapers have cheapened costs of production, is.

"It is a safe bet that the print paper bill of any great metropolitan daily today far exceeds the total cost of production in 1916 and is probably two to five times 1896 production costs in most cases.

"In New York City in 1896 we had ten morning daily newspapers which claimed 1,003,845 circulation, but which probably had not over 750,000 or 800,000 between them. In 1922 we had seven morning newspapers with a bonafide net sale of 1,886,184, between them a gain of 882,339 in circulation or 88 per cent compared with a gain in population of 63 per cent.

"A glance at the list of morning newspapers in 1896 makes one shudder to think of any comparison with our better grade newspapers of today. There was the Morning Advertiser, the Mercury, and the Recorder, each a veritable joke as a newspaper, while the Sun, Herald, Tribune and Times were on the rocks before the deadly competition of Pulitzer and Hearst.

"It will be remembered that the New York Times at that time was in the hands of a receiver. The circulation figures given were 75,000, but according to Mr. Ochs it only had 25,726 in April, 1898, so the figure claimed for 1895-6 was probably 50,000 more than it had.

"In 1896 the total claimed circulation of all New York newspapers was 1,518,500, as compared with 3,431,086 bonafide net sale in 1922, a gain of 1,932,586 or 125 per cent. In 1900 New York's population was 3,437,202, as compared with 5,620,048 in 1920, a gain of 2,182,846, or 63 per cent.

"Meanwhile in Philadelphia total newspaper sales in 1896 were 865,912 as compared with 1,270,187 in 1922, a gain of 46 per cent, as compared with a 41 per cent increase in population. The Bulletin alone jumped from 12,900 to 485,145.

"In Boston the total daily circulation of all newspapers in 1896 was 751,038, as compared with 1,443,886, a gain of 692,842 or 92 per cent. In 1900 the population of Boston was 560,892, in 1920 it was 748,060, a gain of 187,168 or 33 per cent.

"Regardless of the views of cities that our present day newspapers are too much alike, or 'Individuality in newspapers (always aside from typographical deliria which means nothing to the public) went to the discard long ago. Copy-cat is now the journalistic duty,' according to Russell. Our newspapers are probably as different in essentials as they ever were.

"If the critics refer to 'individuality' in the newspaper business as that freedom of some alleged great editor to prove himself a contentious fool with a chip on his shoulder, Russell is right. Our newspapers have clearly grown beyond the point when such antics are permitted or tolerated.

"Our metropolitan newspapers of today each possesses newspaper individuality, reflecting that sort of public service for which it is made. It is a saner product, vastly superior to the possibilities of twenty-five years ago, and of so much greater and wider influence as to arouse the antagonism of glib writers in critical organs of opinion.

"Our newspapers of today are freer from the implied control of advertisers than at any time in history and much freer than the newspapers in any other country. In New York in February, all department stores went out of the Times for several weeks, yet the Times printed as much other advertising as was comfortable.

"In New Haven all of the department stores have been out of two newspapers for months on end and yet the newspapers are successful and the only losers are the stores. In Paterson, N. J., another newspaper has successfully proved that it can prosper without big advertising.

"In New York City with all evening newspapers at three cents a copy, our circulation revenue is greater than our print paper bills, regardless of Mr. Russell's statement to the contrary.

"If dreaming theorists were operating our newspapers they would not be as large, as good, as entertaining, as accurate, and as independent as they are.

"A glance through the daily newspapers of twenty-five years ago shows what wonderful progress has been made. The world goes on to better and better things, regardless of the yapping of those who have lost their hold on the band wagon."

Michigan Honors Pioneer

A branch library was recently dedicated in Detroit to the memory of Rev. Father Gabriel Richard, who brought the first printing press into Michigan. He might be said to be the father of the Michigan newspapers, for it was on his printing press that the first newspaper and the first book published in Michigan were printed.

THE PRESS—AND CONTEMPT OF COURT

THE Nation will print the following in its issue of May 23:

In all our judicial system there is no more archaic or undemocratic survival of absolutism than the power of judges to punish for contempt of court. It cuts right athwart all modern judicial process, denying trial by jury and often even defense by counsel; it harks back to the ancient theory of lèse majesté and the shadowy realms of formalism and autocracy from which we derive our absurd legal verbiage, our judges' robes, and other ridiculous clap-trap that serves no possible purpose except to befuddle the public. A judge, it is true, must preserve order in court, and there is some argument for giving him the right to punish offenders summarily, although official inquiries and investigations of countless sorts are satisfactorily conducted every year without any such powers. However this be, it is certain that the power of a judge to punish acts committed outside of the court serves no necessary purpose and should be withdrawn. Disobedience of court orders should be punishable through indictment and jury trial; criticism of judicial decisions should be subject to no restraint other than the protection which every individual has against libel, slander, and the like. We discarded long since the doctrine that the King can do no wrong; it is time to rid ourselves of similar superstition in regard to judges and courts.

The unwisdom of contempt of court proceedings is brought home at this time by cases which have arisen in Tennessee and in Alabama. The editor of the Memphis Press has been fined $300 by Judge Ross of the Federal District Court for an editorial written during the railway shopmen's strike last September. The editorial was a moderately worded protest against the arrest of a labor editor for contempt because his language had been construed as in violation of the notorious injunction obtained by Attorney General Daugherty. The action of Judge Ross is a good example of the kind of power which no court needs and none should have. It is a clear interference with freedom of the press, and must multiply a thousand fold the contempt of court which it is supposed to suppress. In Alabama three members of the editorial staff of the Birmingham Post were sentenced to twenty-four hours in jail for publishing certain facts about a man charged with murder that were held to be prejudicial to a fair trial. This is a power strictly exercised in England but of infrequent application here. The purpose is a worthy one, but is it possible in any important trial nowadays to gather a jury consisting of other than imbeciles each member of which has not formed some previous opinion on the case?

BEST NEWS STORIES TO BE COMPILED

Novelist Announces Competition in Three Classes of Reportorial Writing on American Daily Papers

In order to arouse interest in better newspaper stories relating to human interest, humor, and straight news reporting, and to stimulate those engaged in active newspaper work to more effort along these lines. A. Stone, novelist, announces a competition for the best example of news writing in American newspapers for the current year. Any news story appearing in a newspaper between January 1, 1923, and October 1, 1923, may be submitted by contestants.

A. STONE

The award is divided into the following three classes: (A) competition for the best human interest story; (B) competition for the best straight news story; (C) competition for the most humorous news story.

Only those who are staff members of a daily newspaper are eligible, and only stories clipped from the newspaper on which the competitor is regularly employed, and which are accompanied by the signature of the managing editor, will be considered. Stories must be based on actual news of the day, Sunday features being barred.

The winners in each class will receive handsomely engraved plaques made of solid copper.

As Mr. Stone plans to publish the stories of the winners, along with 75 others considered of sufficient merit, in permanent form after the conclusion of the competition, he imposes as one of the conditions the rule that the ownership of the copyright of the successful competitors shall be vested in his name. A committee chosen from representative American newspapers will assist in the judging.

All competitors are asked to submit their clippings to Mr. Stone at Milton-on-the-Hudson, New York State.

Mr. Stone is the author of "American Pep," "Fighting Byng," "The Yazu Mystery," and other novels. The first of these books was one of the best sellers during the war period.

He is a former Kentucky newspaper man. During the war he was engaged in semi-diplomatic service for the Government and traveled all over the world.

He has lectured on the narcotic problem on various occasions in New York City.

$3,000,000 Life Insurance Policy

Floyd L. Carlisle, president of the St. Regis Paper Company, is negotiating for $3,000,000 life insurance. This puts him in a class with the following: Jesse Lasky, $5,000,000 insurance; Adolph Zukor, $5,000,000; Rodman Wanamaker, $4,500,000; Pierre S. du Pont, $4,000,000; James C. Penney, $3,000,000, and Percy A. Rockefeller, $3,000,000.

Such Is Fame

John C. Shaffer, publisher of the Chicago Evening Post; Richard Atwater, editor of the "Pillar to Post" column and Walter A. Washburn, city editor, were wondering whether they were honored last week. A Pullman sleeper was named after each.

The second annual bicycle derby of the Chicago Tribune A. A. will be held over the two and one-fifth mile course in Humboldt Park on Memorial Day.

MRS. STAN HARDING DENIES CHARGES OF MRS. MARGUERITE HARRISON

British Institute of Journalists Sending Out New Chapter of Women Writers' Controversy to Newspaper Organizations Throughout World

THE following signed statement by Mrs. Stan Harding, dealing with the interview by Mrs. Marguerite Harrison, published in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of April 14, 1923, has been forwarded from London to EDITOR & PUBLISHER by Mrs. Harding with authority for publication and is being distributed to newspaper organizations throughout the world by George Springfield, executive chairman of the British Institute of Journalists:

"Though published as a refutation, on careful examination it will be seen that in her statement to the EDITOR & PUBLISHER of April 14, Mrs. Marguerite Harrison corroborates every one of my charges, viz.:

"1. That, when she went to Russia in 1920, in the guise of a newspaper correspondent, she was an agent of the American Army Intelligence. She admits this quite frankly.

"2. That she was arrested by the Soviet authorities as an American spy in April, 1920, and she afterwards acted as Soviet informer; to quote her own words, 'furnishing them with worthless information, thus affording ample justification for my [Mrs. Harrison's] subsequent arrest in October, 1920, and for trial and imposition of the death penalty had the Soviet Government seen fit to impose it.' (The Extraordinary Commission has stated that her information proved in some cases 'absolutely false' but that it led to many arrests. The consequence of her false information in my case was that I spent months in solitary confinement under sentence of death.)

"3. That she falsely denounced me to the Soviet. She affords ample confirmation of this by renewing her wholly untrue allegations that I was in the British Intelligence, and that as such I co-operated with her in Berlin. This charge of hers is tantamount to an accusation against Lord Curzon of attempting to obtain money on false pretences from the Russian Government when he requested them to accept my claim for compensation and stated categorically that I was not at any time a Secret Service agent.

"It is absolutely untrue that I went to Germany in the latter part of 1918 as a British Government agent. The reasons for this journey are given in White paper Cm D 1602. It is equally false that I ever worked for the British Mission in Berlin or that I ever served any government in any capacity whatever. I never to my knowledge met General Ewart, whose name Mrs. Harrison mentions, or any member of his mission. Long after Mrs. Harrison left Berlin I met General Ewart's successor and, like other British journalists in Berlin, I sometimes saw him. On such occasions I not only listened to his views on current events in Germany but also, I fear, inflicted on him mine, which were of a very definite nature.

"Mrs. M. Harrison's allegations that I co-operated with her in Berlin is a miserable lie. I met her not as she says in January, 1919, but in March; my employment as Daily News correspondent had not come to an end, as she suggests. It was in fact a year later that I first became Daily News correspondent in Germany. At this time I was doing occasional journalism. When she left Berlin for Poland, somewhere about May 1, she offered me her room at the Adlon at a reduced price if she might leave her luggage there. This I accepted, and on her return, at her suggestion, she and I shared the room for several weeks—not months. She was frequently absent and left Berlin for the U. S. A. on or about June 19, 1919.

"At the time that she invited me to room with her, I had not the faintest suspicion that she was doing intelligence work. I knew her only as an agreeable woman journalist, correspondent of the Baltimore Sun. It was for this paper that she invited me to sell her several short articles, which I did at current rates, this being the only business transaction which ever passed between us. No doubt she obtained from me, her unsuspecting colleague, information and introductions, which I would, however, gladly have given to any fellow-journalist. When almost immediately before her departure from Berlin I became aware that she was seeking information for other than journalistic purposes I told her so. She informed me that her articles on Poland had attracted attention in high quarters and that she had thereupon been asked to send reports to the American representatives at the Peace Conference. I later received fuller and different accounts of her activities from some of her compatriots in Berlin.

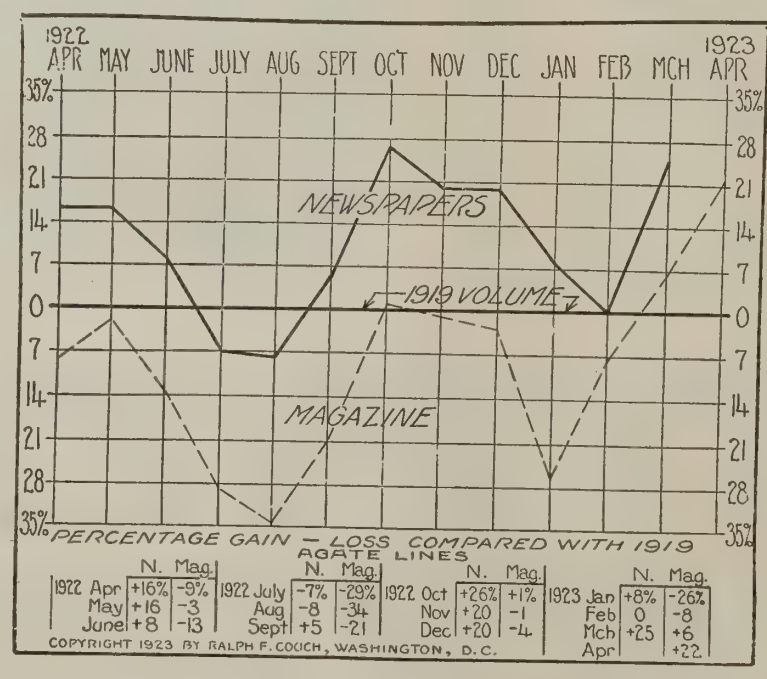
"To come to Russia. At the time that I received the commission of the New York World to go to Russia as its correspondent, Mrs. Harrison, it will be remembered, admits she was furnishing the Soviet with 'worthless information.' She states that on learning from the Soviet Foreign Office of my application to enter Russia, she advised them not to admit me, urging my 'newspaper inexperience,' and she says that she did this for my sake! When she heard that I had received permission and was on my way to Russia with splendid introductions from friends of the Soviet Government, she informed the Soviet that I had socialist sympathies—so she says. Evidently the Soviet authorities felt that my 'newspaper inexperience,' coupled with socialist sympathies, was a serious menace to the Soviet Republic, for, as Mrs. Harrison correctly points out, they sent the chief of the foreign espionage department to Esthonia to meet me and to accompany me from Reval to Moscow, where on my arrival I was placed in her room and arrested the same night.

"This room-sharing business was evidently part of Mrs. Harrison's technique. I am not the only British woman writer who will give evidence of having been invited and compelled to share a room with Mrs. Harrison during the time that she was acting as Soviet informer. There are also other British and American newspaper representatives who had some personal experience of Mrs. Harrison's spy work in Russia.

"Mrs. Harrison next says that she was 'perfectly frank' when questioned by the Soviet authorities as to our relations in Berlin. The result was that I was condemned to death three days later on the charge of co-operating with her as a British agent in secret service work—a charge in which there is not a scintilla of truth. During the succeeding months of solitary confinement under terrible conditions, the Extraordinary Commission repeatedly but unsuccessfully attempted to coerce me also into buying release by becoming its agent, and by corroborating Mrs. Harrison's false allegations. I have related elsewhere my struggles to get out of the death trap in which I found myself, on any terms which loyalty to myself and my newspaper did not forbid. I have described the ruse by which I obtained a brief interview with Tchitcherin, which, however, led to nothing, for when my judge, who was present, saw that I was not about to make any revelations, but merely to protest my innocence, he caused Tchitcherin to leave the room without listening to my appeal. I have also related how in October, after three months of Lubianka secret cells, as a condition of my transference to the Buturky prison from solitary confinement in the cold storage cell where I was being done to death, I consented to endorse some of Mrs. Harrison's minor allegations, while reasserting my positive denial that I had ever been a Secret Service Agent, or co-operated with her.

"One American newspaper publishes Mrs. Harrison's statement under a headline to the effect that I 'courted arrest' in entering Russia after my acquaintance with her in Berlin. But Mrs. Harrison herself was at this time apparently in 'high favor' with the Soviet and had accompanied the British Labor Delegation down the Volga. It was impossible for me to guess on what terrible terms this 'high favor' had been purchased.

"Mrs. Harrison states that she sent me a message not to come to Russia. None reached me, but in any case her advice would not have prevented me from entering Russia for my newspaper once I had received the Soviet safe-conduct for that purpose.



"Mrs. Harrison expresses the opinion that the Soviet was bound to arrest me if only for the purpose of getting information out of me about herself. No doubt she was afraid of this, but her fears were groundless. During my five months' stay in Russia the Extraordinary Commission did not succeed in inducing me either to corroborate or supplement their ample information about Mrs. Harrison's activities. It was no business of mine to do so.

"She makes the bare-faced suggestion that it was up to me to 'prove my innocense.' She knows very well that I was allowed no trial, had no possibility of calling witnesses or communicating in any way with the outside world and that I was condemned on the false charges she now repeats after protesting my innocence in interrogatories that lasted whole nights.

"My claim is not against Mrs. Harrison, but against her employers who camouflaged their agent as a newspaper correspondent with disastrous results to a bona-fide journalist.

"STAN HARDING."

NEWSPAPERS LEAD IN ADVERTISING GAINS

NEWSPAPERS now are leading all other forms of printed periodicals in the rate of gain in advertising volume, it is shown in studies compiled by the Department of Commerce, based on the total number of agate lines published each month in a selected list of daily newspapers and monthly magazines, according to Ralph F. Couch, of Washington.

The selected group of newspapers published 83,496,000 agate lines in March, 1923, the most recent month for which official reports are available. The magazine group published 1,730,000 agate lines. The total advertising volume of the newspapers was 25 per cent above the average of 1919, a good business year. The advertising volume of the selected group of magazines showed a gain of but six per cent over 1919.

During the past thirteen months newspapers fell behind the 1919 volume in only two months, July and August, 1922. In all other months volume of agate lines was equal to or greater than in 1919.

Magazine advertising, however, when compared with the business of 1919, showed an almost continuous decline. In August, 1922, it fell 34 per cent below 1919. It was not until March, 1923, that the magazines began to show a steady increase over 1919.

CABLE-RADIO RATE WAR

Price Cutting May Halt Laying of New Atlantic Line

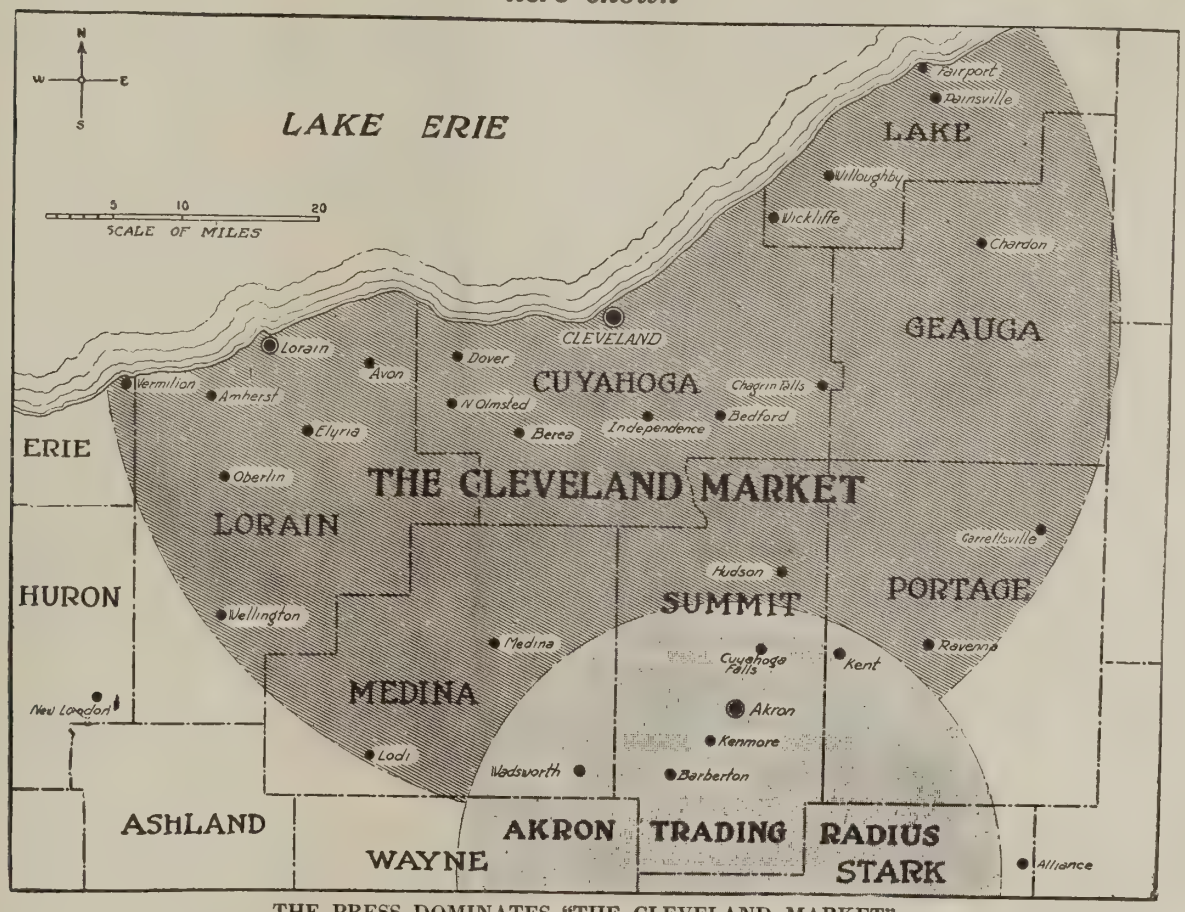
The rate war now in progress between the cable and wireless companies threatens to prevent the consummation of the American plan for allocation of the former German cables in the Atlantic, by which the Western Union Company was to lay a cable line from New York to the Azores to connect with an Italian cable to be constructed from the Azores to Rome and Mediterranean ports.

The trans-Atlantic cable companies have reached an agreement among themselves for a considerable reduction of tolls, but it is not apparent, cable company officials say, that the radio companies will not make further reduction. Due to the existing situation, the cable companies cent of the trans-Atlantic cable capacity contend that not more than the 60 per is operating.

To Fight Censorship

Matters of interest to the film industry and the press were discussed at a luncheon held in the Dutch Treat club-room of Browne's Chop House, May 15. Samuel Goldwyn and Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman told of trouble caused by inconsistent censorship codes in different states, and Frederick Hume, secretary of the National Publishers' Association, as well as a number of magazine editors and writers spoke of oppressive censorship measures, past and present and future. A committee to represent writers, publishers, photoplay producers and others affected by legislation of this sort has been appointed to form an anti-censorship organization.

Publisher Held Up and Robbed



Fred Vannatter, president of the Northeastern Printing Company and editor of the Upper Gratiot News, Detroit, was held up and robbed of $630 by five bandits recently. He was struck on the head and left unconscious in his car. When he recovered consciousness he drove to Receiving Hospital for treatment.

THE PRESS DOMINATES "THE CLEVELAND MARKET"

Twenty per cent of all the wage earners in Ohio work in the territory shown in the above map. 180,000 are employed in Cleveland alone and they earn $300,000,000 a year. That's almost a MILLION DOLLARS A DAY for every buying day of the year! Cleveland is now working overtime on one of the Biggest Building Programs ever undertaken by an American city. Hundreds of apartment houses and dwellings, the Great Union Trust Company Building, the Union Station, Public Library, Federal Reserve Bank, etc., are employing thousands of skilled workers at peak wages. The territory above shown is the ONLY "Market" in which Cleveland newspapers furnish an advertising contact. The Cleveland PRESS—189,397—has the largest circulation of any daily newspaper in the city of Cleveland or the State of Ohio. 162,712 of the PRESS' circulation is in "The Cleveland Market" above shown.

National advertisers best serve their own interests when they concentrate on the dominating circulation of the PRESS to secure dealer-distribution and MOVE MERCHANDISE in "The Cleveland Market."

OUR OWN WORLD OF LETTERS

Edited by JAMES MELVIN LEE

Director Department of Journalism, New York University

SOLOMON BULKLEY GRIFFIN, who for forty years or more was managing editor of the Springfield Republican, has selected for his biography an appropriate title for a newspaper man, "People and Politics" (Little, Brown & Co.). Only a few of the chapters, however, are distinctly biographical. Most of them deal with the people with whom Mr. Griffin has been brought into contact and with the politics—State and national—which he has observed during his long editorial career.

In the first chapter, Mr. Griffin tells how he got his job on the Republican under Samuel Bowles, the elder. One question asked was, "Have you not done much of the work on the college paper?" The arrangement finally reached called for the initial salary of $25 a month.

Of the journalism of that time in general and of the Republican in particular, Mr. Griffin gives the following interesting glimpse:

> Old-fashioned was journalism then? It may have been when judged by some modern standards. But it was self-respecting and helpful; it paid careful regard to the rights of the reader; and it gave him straightforward service and reliable goods. One could take pride in his calling, and possess the assurance that there would be no bad taste in the mouth after the day's work was done. The continuity of news stories was preserved, with little skipping here and there over the pages of the paper or the magazine. Capitals were used sparingly. It became a saying among tramp printers—most interesting of our nomads—that "Only Jesus Christ and Sam Bowles were capitalized on the Republican." There was no muddle of loose sheets to flop about as one read his paper. Uncommercialized common sense forbade the use of what was known in country printing offices as "stud horse type," but made display type the servant of sensible oversight, whether in advertising or the headlines of reading matter. The sum of it all was a satisfying service and self-respecting merchandising. The use of big black type leaves a paper with lessened resources when really great news is precipitated. It is forced to make itself a poster.

In another chapter Mr. Griffin tells still more about the paper under Bowles, the elder:

> The Republican was prominent in the seventies for painstaking intelligence in illuminating the rather meager telegraphic news service of that time. Date lines used were few. The Associated Press was not permitted to edit this journal, and matter which came over the wires and cost money did not thereby acquire preference. The paper interpreted and individualized the general news as well as local happenings.

In other words, the Republican was "tailor-made" and not "ready-made," for it encouraged an originality in its features that made the paper distinctly individual.

One of the men who was helping to make the Republican in transitional days was Charles H. Adams, who wrote the political editorials—always with a quill pen. No one on the editorial staff surpassed him in wit and humor. One finds in the volume this note of comment from his pen:

> Centaurs and dragons long since quit the stage,
> Vampires and werewolves are no more the rage,
> No more these monsters daunt the human mind;
> But Griffins still superfluous lag behind.
> The Devil is sniffin'
> With gluttonous glee.
> "Ah! nicely grilled Griffin
> Is the eatin' for me!"

Mr. Griffin's first room mate in a boarding house in Springfield was a recent Dartmouth graduate by the name of Miller, who also had just secured a job on the Republican. After three years of work, Miller received a letter from a college friend, who had been in editorial charge of the New York Weekly Times, but had decided to turn to the ministry, advising him to apply for the editorial job. He got this job, which was the stepping-stone to the position of editor-in-chief of the New York Times in later years. Mr. Griffin prints many anecdotes humorous in character about the days when he and Miller roomed together in that boarding house in Springfield.

Mr. Griffin believes that Mr. Bowles was the first editor to decline railroad passes for himself and members of the staff, for fear of the possibility of their exercising a softening influence, even though unconsciously, on the relations of newspapers and corporations. William Seaver Woods, the present editor of the Literary Digest, once told me of the hard time Bowles had to pay a railroad for the use of a special train. Space—no editorial fib—does not permit the insertion of the story in this review. But Mr. Griffin does insert the following in his book:

> William H. Vanderbilt may never have said to a newspaper man in the sense reported, "The public be damned," but that sentiment represented too much the railroad viewpoint. A very diminutive official of the Boston & Albany road was cordially disliked by reporters. He once threatened to kick a Republican man, well over six feet in stature, who looked at the legs of the little man and retorted with a laugh, "You haven't got the facilities, Major!"

The strength of the editorial page of the Republican is too well known to need any comment. The following quotation may explain the source of that strength:

> It had been my theory that the reporter who handles conventions and large news happenings is best qualified to make editorial comment upon them. This was put in practice so far as conditions permitted. The editorial writers had each his special subjects, and they were expert in them. In this way a vital editorial page was maintained. Men wrote because they had something to say.

Mr. Griffin enlivens his chapters with several April fool jokes played by the Republican upon its contemporary, the Springfield Union. As my first regular newspaper job was on the latter paper, I should like to return this courtesy, for I think the Union usually came off first best in these matters. But again space forbids.

In discussing the Tilden campaign for the presidency, Mr. Griffin explains the origin of the political press bureau:

> That campaign introduced what the Republicans promptly called "Tilden's Literary Bureau," an adjunct now employed in all presidential contests. The Democracy, long in disfavor, had small newspaper support, and needed to find new ways of reaching the country. Miller, then editing the weekly edition of the New York Times, contributed to the Tilden literature, as did other New York newspapermen I knew.

In one of the chapters, Mr. Griffin tells how he first met William Jennings Bryan who occupied an adjacent seat in the press section at one of the national political conventions. Bryan at that time was the chief of the editorial staff of the Omaha World Herald. In commenting upon the incident, Mr. Griffin adds:

> To the newspaper correspondents Mr. Bryan would have seemed about as likely to be made the Presidential candidate of his party as any one of the busy reporters, had the possibility been suggested. Yet that honor he was soon to achieve. He was never to reach the White House, but in many future national conventions was to send "comments upon important happenings," syndicated to many newspapers. He was to become "the great commoner" of the political reporters, to play a conspicuous and often very important part in the history of his party, to become secretary of state, but not president.

I have picked out for special mention parts of the book relating rather directly to journalism. In justice to the volume it must be said that the contents for the most part deal with glimpses of State and national politics from Hayes to Wilson.

As Mr. Griffin's editorial position permitted him to be behind the scenes and to watch the movements of the stage machinery, his volume is a valuable contribution to the literature of American politics and government. In its way, it is as valuable today as was "Recollections of a Busy Life" by Horace Greeley, published at the time when Mr. Griffin was beginning his editorial career. Surely Mr. Griffin cannot expect more from one whose first regular newspaper job was on the Springfield Union.

FOR FIFTEEN YEARS, W. O. Saunders has been the editor of the Independent, published at Elizabeth City, N. C. During this decade and a half he has been a close student of human nature in the country field. Consequently, his reflections on "Human Nature As Seen By a Country Editor" in the May issue of the American Magazine is the "fattest take" from the periodicals of the month.

He spoke from practical experience when he says:

> Printing the news and facing the music isn't all fun. There is a lot of pathos mingled with the comedy, and many a tear and heartache offset the laughter and smiles.

To illustrate this point he mentions the story of the son of a prominent family who absconded with certain funds of the bank in which he was employed. As the father and mother were the editor's friends, the latter found it hard to print the news in all of its details, including, as it did, a picture of the boy and a picture of the woman who had led the youth astray. The night after the edition came out, the mother, calling the editor on the phone, said:

> I have always been your friend. I thought you were merciful—and you have broken my heart. I thought I could survive this thing, when here comes your paper with that picture of my boy—and that woman! Oh, my God! Why did you do it? Why didn't you drive a dagger into my heart? Just suppose—just suppose it had been your boy!

Mr. Saunders told the mother that he thought he would have handled the story about his own boy in the same way.

His philosophy of newspaper-making is thus succinctly summed up:

> A newspaper man who fairly and fearlessly prints the news has this decided advantage over the spineless, wishy-washy, apologetic publisher who doesn't: the former is respected by the enemies he makes; the latter is often held in contempt by the friends he thinks he makes.

Mr. Saunders is not so strong for personal mention as for local mention. By way of illustration he cites the following two cases:

> There are two dozen men on the directorate of a certain bank. Every one of them feels a thrill of pride and much personal satisfaction when the paper tells in a newsy, entertaining way of some worthwhile thing the bank has done. It's his bank.
> There are eight hundred or more members of a certain church, the names of not more than a score of whom enter into the news of my paper in a year; but every one of that congregation of eight hundred and more reads himself or herself into every nice thing said about that church.

One of the first things Mr. Saunders learned about human nature was the fact that free human beings can not be driven. He believes:

> A newspaper man who tries to reform everything and everybody by wielding a lash or a club is slated for a lot of disappointments. The "roast" may be the most entertaining, the most attention-compelling, and, often, the most popular weapon an editor can use, but it is the least effective. The public has a way of considering even a consummate scoundrel sufficiently abused.

To get results he advocates the principle of letting the public discover for itself that it wants the thing. Like the magazine editor, he believes in filling his paper full of pictures of women, but he does not overlook the importance of the child as the following quotation will show:

> I find human nature reacting favorably every time I publish a picture of a baby or any cute story about a child. All the world loves children. And now let me put in a piece of good advice to every newspaper man and every business man who reads this: Don't ignore the children in your community; because one of the fastest growing things on earth is a child. The man who runs a newspaper, a store, a bank, or anything else depending upon the public for good will and support is the biggest fool on earth if he thinks he can ignore the children. The kid rolling a hoop under your feet, or roller-skating all over your sidewalk and making a lot of unnecessary noise today, is simply notice to you of the energy that is going to run your town tomorrow. A boy or girl fifteen or sixteen years old has only five or six years to go before he or she will be playing an important part in the affairs of your town, and every one of them is a potential factor to be reckoned with. Those of the older generation who find themselves being crowded aside by younger men and women are those who neglected to run along with those same youngsters when the running was good. The kiddie that you befriend today will love you and respect you as long as he lives, if he's the right sort of kiddie; but if you cuff or wallop him he will never forget that, either. Take my own case; The great influences that shaped my life were mostly commonplace incidents in the lives of a few kind-hearted men and women who said an encouraging word here and there, or did some helpful thing for me when I was a kid.

We'd Like to Know You Better!

Indianapolis, Indiana, people buy British-made hats, men's clothing, smokers' pipes, golf clubs, luggage, cutlery, toilet articles, porcelain and earthenware, and textiles and lace of course. When they go to sea, many of them travel in British ships. Indiana firms carry British marine and fire insurance on cargoes shipped abroad in British bottoms. We buy and read British novels. We have a wholesome respect and admiration for goods that come from Britain—and we buy them.

What else, made in the British Isles, is as good as the things we now know? We'll buy it, if you will send it here and tell us about it.

Indianapolis and the Indianapolis Radius (the territory included within seventy miles of the city) is a big, rich, prosperous market of 800,000 people. This is the geographical center of population and of manufacturing of the United States, the heart of a vast producing region both in industry and agriculture.

To sell goods in this territory, space in The Indianapolis News is the first and prime essential. It covers this market.

INLAND PRESS STARTS BALL ROLLING FOR NATIONAL COST BUREAU

All Rejected Free Publicity to Be Returned to Senders Through Secretary of Association—Colored Paper for Mailing Opposed

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

CHICAGO, May 16.—Resolutions favoring establishment of a national bureau open to all newspapers desiring to participate, for the continuation of a newspaper cost finding system along the lines successfully conducted by the Inland Daily Press Association for several years, were adopted this week at a meeting of the association here, ending today, as follows:

"Resolved, that the Inland Daily Press Association is in favor of, and gives its active support to, the continuation of a newspaper cost finding system, but it is believed, however, that the largest usefulness of this service requires that it be organized upon a nation-wide basis, and be opened to all newspapers desiring to enter, and that the reports be submitted in dollars and cents, rather than by percentage.

"To this end, the Inland instructs its president to name a committee to direct the organization of this work, on behalf of the Inland, upon a national basis. It is recommended that a charge not to exceed $5 per year, be made for membership in the cost finding bureau. It is recommended that this resolution with its appended questions for membership vote, be submitted by the secretary to various other newspaper organizations for their action.

"It is ordered that this resolution with the following questions be submitted to mail referendum vote of the entire inland membership:

Are you in favor of maintaining a general cost accounting bureau for newspapers, at a cost of not to exceed $5 per year for membership?

Will you become a member of such an organization, making regular semi-annual reports to it (the identity of such reports to be confidential to the cost finding office), and receiving the compiled reports of costs in return?

Will you submit reports in actual figures of dollars and cents?

The committee appointed is composed of C. R. Butler, of the Mankato (Minn.) Free Press; A. L. Miller, Battle Creek (Mich.) Enquirer-News, and Lee Loomis, of the Muscatine (Ia.) Journal.

Some suggested that the actuary department of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., could work out a cost finding system, and handle it. More were undecided whether there should be a flat $5 membership charge, and whether the finding should be on a percentage basis or in dollars and cents.

The next most important subject was that of newspaper wrapping and delivery through the mails. O. J. Foreman, of Monmouth, Ill., led this discussion. He said the suggestion that colored paper would expedite delivery had been taken up, and that he found a majority of Postoffice attaches against it, because colored paper would be detrimental to their eyesight.

He declared the best method was to use white print paper.

"The paper should be addressed with a type that is clean and distinct," he said.

"The paper should be thick enough to hold the paper and run the full length of the newspaper. It should be folded and not rolled. I am told that the folded system is three times faster in the Postoffice than the rolled.

When the mattter of free publicity was brought up again, many expressed the belief that the system of the individual members returning rejected matter was productive of ill-feeling against the newspapers. It was decided to adopt a new method by which rejected material shall be sent to Will V. Tufford, secretary of the Inland Press Association who will act as a central agency and return the matter from his office.

E. P. Adler, Davenport, Ia., spoke on the print paper situation, saying that, while it was a little early to speak with assurance, he believed it generally thought by those in touch with the paper manufacturers that the price of the paper would remain the same for the last six months of the year.

Dr. G. L. Wendt, of the American Chemical Society's news service, sought to learn from the Inlanders just how news concerning chemistry, technical from its very nature, could be handled in a manner that would not taboo it under the free publicity barrier.

Frank D. Throop, of the Davenport (Ia.) Democrat, spoke on "The Influence of Modern Journalism—the Editorial Department of a Daily Newspaper," and mentioned the remarks of President Harding to the Associated Press at its recent annual meeting. Mr. Throop said:

President Harding prefaced his formal remarks concerning the World Court by a few statements referring to newspaper men themselves, which should have a very deep meaning to the publishers of this country. One paragraph says:

"Frankly I have never squirmed under criticism, but I have sometimes been appalled at inaccuracy of statement, and if I were going to lecture on journalism my theme would be 'A Little Less Eagerness, and Much More of Accuracy.'"

This paragraph has lingered in my mind ever since my return from New York, and it seems to me that the President touched on a theme which is of vital importance to publishing interests of this country.

It brings out very clearly the tremendous responsibility which rests upon our shoulders in the publication of a daily newspaper. We are the means by which the public is kept thoroughly informed as to the World's events, and imperfections which creep into our news columns are inclined to give the public generally a misapprehension of our motives, and an insight into our business which does not reflect the greatest amount of credit upon us.

A few days after the Associated Press meeting there was held in Washington a meeting of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, and at that time a code of ethics was adopted, which, I think, every member of the Inland Daily Press Association should read carefully and see that it is posted in a conspicuous place in his editorial rooms.

This code consists of seven articles, namely, responsibility, freedom of the press, independence, truthfulness and accuracy, impartiality, fair play, decency. These seven fundamental principles should govern the news and editorial policy of every self-respecting newspaper, and if they did, our responsibility to the public as truthful purveyors of the day's news intelligently commented upon, would, in a large measure, be established.

No doubt many of us remember very distinctly the publication of the Brass Check, the book written by Upton Sinclair, in which he endeavors to prove by certain facts and instances that the press of this country is entirely controlled from a capitalistic headquarters.

The unfortunate deduction to be made from a book like The Brass Check is the fact that many believed what he wrote, and I was astonished to find so many people in my own community who thought Sinclair was telling the truth. A peculiar feature, however, I discovered in my investigation of this subject was that, while the Socialist condemns the so-called "kept press," that in every instance where there was such a thing as a "kept press," and it was nearly always kept by radicals, that newspaper was read by a comparatively few subscribers and patronized by a very limited number of advertisers, and was a failure from a business standpoint.

During my investigation I wrote to a large number of editors scattered over the country, asking for their frank and free opinion as to whether or not they thought there had been any growing distrust on the part of the people as to the integrity, honesty and sincerity of purpose of the modern newspaper.

The replies which I received from these letters were of an intensely interesting nature, and the peculiar thing was that practically everyone of them, while admitting there were certain signs of such a doctrine in the air, there was really no basis for the thought that the modern newspaper was losing any of its influence.

The conclusion to be formed from these rather rambling remarks is that you get back to the principles enunciated by President Harding that we should be more accurate in the gathering and dissemination of our news, that we should never for a moment forget or belittle the tremendous responsibility which rests upon us as publishers and if we would maintain our place in the sun it must be done by truthful, honorable and accurate presentation of the news of the day, intelligently and fairly commented upon, forgetting self, forgetting prejudice, but never forgetting our duty to our readers and our community."

Resolutions were adopted expressing the regret of the Inlanders at the death of George T. Campbell, former president.

A round-table discussion was led by Linwood I. Noyes, of the Ironwood (Mich.) Globe.

During the luncheon today, Secretary Wil V. Tufford and his bride were presented with a silver tea service. The presentation speech was made by George D. Lindsay of Marion, Ind.

John Sundine, of the Moline (Ill.) Dispatch, who is usually present at all association meetings, was reported in Sweden on important business.

Secretary Wil Tufford reported 246 active members.

Harry Hayward, publisher of the Honolulu Star-Bulletin, with his bride attended the meeting. He said he would purchase while in this country new machinery and equipment for the Star-Bulletin.

NEW ENGLAND DAILIES RE-ELECT ELLIS HEAD

Worcester Telegram-Gazette Man Again President of Association—Convention Hears Agency Troubles Discussed

Theodore T. Ellis of the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram-Gazette was re-elected president of the New England Daily Newspaper Association at its annual meeting May 15 in Boston. Forty-five members were present.

Other officers elected were: vice-president, Samuel E. Hudon, Woonsocket (R. I.) Call; secretary, Robert L. Wright, Haverhill (Mass.) Gazette; treasurer, A. H. Fuller, Brockton (Mass.) Enterprise; governors: James T. Murray, New Bedford (Mass.) Standard-Mercury; John D. Plummer, Springfield (Mass.) Union; William J. Pape, Waterbury (Conn.) Republican-American; William H. Dow, Portland (Me.) Express; John A. Muehling, Manchester (N .H.) Union-Leader; Howard C. Rice, Brattleboro (Vt.) Reformer; Allison Stone, Providence (R. I.) Journal-Bulletin. The seven governors, together with the four officers, constitute the full board of governors.

"The untrustworthy advertising agency is a menace to all business," John Benson, head of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, declared in an address at a complimentary dinner by the New England "4 A's" council to the convention delegates.

"We advertising agencies handle over $300,000,000 in appropriations annually and this means a business that runs into the billions. As a national body, we are comparatively small, about 1,200 altogether of these only about 200 do a national business, and 136 of them are members of the "4 A's."

Responsibility to the advertiser and to the publisher he termed of prime importance for an advertising agency business, but showed that advertising rests or falls on whether or not it is profitable. Public confidence is needed.

A larger margin of profit for the agency so that, after overhead and similar expenses are deducted, there be left 5 per cent instead of but 2½ and 3 per cent should be worked out, Mr. Benson asserted.

A secret rebate he dubbed "a stab in the back" for all responsible advertising. Discriminating rates, whether due to competition or not, are as unfair he said, as discriminating traffic rates, and the association will battle them tooth and nail.

Only about 50 of 250 applications for membership in the association have been accepted, according to the president.

This country is far behind Europe in developing aviation, John H. Fahey, publisher of the Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post, the other chief speaker, pointed out in telling of his tour of Europe as a delegate to the International Chambers of Commerce meeting at Rome.

EVENING POST RAISES STOCK $1,000,000

Stockholders Authorizes the Issuance of 10,000 Shares of Preferred at the Par Value of $100 Each

PAPER CO. INSURES HELP

International Announces Liability Benefit for Employes

The International Paper Company, New York, has announced an employes' insurance plan whereby all active employes with the company for six months will be provided with life insurance, protection against permanent and total disability, weekly benefits in case of sickness or non-occupational accident, and a special indemnity for accidental death or dismemberment. The plan covers all subsidiary companies.

New Washington State Daily

The Longview (Wash.) Daily News has made its appearance as a six-column six-page paper, with Associated Press service.

New Home of The New York Times

A FOURTEEN-STORY addition to the present Times Annex is now under construction. The building and equipment, when completed in the autumn of 1923, will double the present capacity, and will be the largest and best equipped newspaper plant in the world. It will provide a total floor area of 317,800 square feet, with a frontage of 243 feet on West Forty-third Street.

Ten thousand square feet will be added to the pressroom. The presses, with new equipment, will include 64 units, to be run as 20 sextuples or 16 octuples, with capacity of 600,000 twenty-four page papers or 480,000 thirty-two page papers per hour.

The composing room will be enlarged 10,000 square feet, giving a total floor space of 22,639 square feet. There will be 79 typesetting machines. Four double junior autoplates will comprise the equipment of the stereotyping department.

So great has been the growth of the rotogravure department, which now prints three sections of the Sunday Times and two weekly publications, that it will soon occupy the greater part of a new building now under erection. Ten one-roll presses will be installed with enlarged space and increased facilities for photo and etching rooms.

The New York Times and the American Market

THE NEW YORK TIMES offers British manufacturers of products sold in America an unusual opportunity to make known their goods.

Read in every state of the United States and all of its possessions, and in 86 foreign countries, The New York Times circulates among the largest group of intelligent and discriminating men and women ever assembled by a newspaper.

Due to the strict censorship which is employed against fraudulent or doubtful advertisements, readers of The New York Times have confidence in the advertisements appearing in its columns.

More advertising is published in The New York Times than in any other New York newspaper. In four months of this year The Times printed 8,322,122 agate lines of advertising, a gain over the corresponding period of last year of 223,516 lines and an excess over the second New York newspaper of 2,305,222 lines. The Times printed a million lines more than the combined volume of the two other New York morning newspapers popularly classed with The Times as to quality of circulation.

Seven Advertisers Charged With Unfair Business Practices

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 15.—Seven complaints charging misleading advertising were issued this week by the Federal Trade Commission in continuation of the commission's campaign against advertising considered unfair competition.

The American Film Company of Chicago, a distributor of motion picture films, was cited for supplying pictures previously run with advertising bearing the new name of the film in large type and the old name in small type with the words "formerly" or "adapted from." The Commission after ascertaining that the contracts made no mention of the fact that the films amounted to a re-issue, stamped the practice, deceptive to the exhibitors and the public.

The Aristo Hosiery Company, New York, was ordered to cease advertising hosiery as "cashmere" unless the word truthfully described the article.

The Williams Soap Company, Indianapolis, was warned against labelling soap "medicated" or being manufactured for a "medical association."

The United Fibre Works, New York, was ordered to discontinue advertising that it manufactured the articles it offered for sale and Hyman and Zaslv, New York, asked to desist advertising as "ivory" goods made from imitation material.

H. Mailender, Cincinnati, was charged with advertising goods as army and navy stores when they were not and advertising an inferior grade of paint and paint made for the Navy on governmental specifications.

The Process Engraving Company, of Chicago, and Edwin E. Ellis Company, Inc., of New York City, are charged in complaints issued by the Federal Trade Commission with marketing printed matter as "engraving." The complaint asserts that the word "engraving," when used in connection with printing, has been well known and understood by the public to include only such products as results from the impression made from engraved plates. The Commission alleges that advertising and selling under the head of "process engraving" printed matter which is not made through the use of engraved plates, is misleading to the public and unfair to competitors.

Brooklyn Children's Court Justifies Its Exclusion of Press

Justice Morgan M. L. Ryan of the Children's Court, Brooklyn, has issued an order barring reporters from the courtroom altogether. This policy is apparently in violation of Section 4 of the State Judiciary Act prescribing that all courts should be open to the public.

"My aim is to protect the child and its future," said Justice Ryan in an interview. "I am legally and morally right in barring the public and the press from my courtroom during a hearing." This view was concurred in by Charles Warner, superintendent of the Brooklyn branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

ECHO OF DANCE MARATHON

Cleveland News Sued by Man for His Time and Services

A peculiar claim has been filed in court against the Cleveland Company, publisher of the Sunday News-Leader and Evening News. Russell Brady asks $2,000 damages of the company and the Martha Lee Club, a social organization promoted largely by the News, for services rendered in staging a marathon fox-trot at the Hotel Olmstead, Cleveland. Brady alleges "he approached the duly authorized officers and representatives of the defendants and suggested the idea of starting an endurance dance in the clubrooms of the defendant, the Martha Lee Club." He asserts the defendants accepted his proposition and services and that he "was the first to enter" in the endurance marathon.

Brady avers that the company disposed of "an increasing number of papers which it would not have been able to sell but for the dancing contest." The plaintiff believes "the receipts were enormous."

Brady contends the defendants promised him compensation but now refuse. He danced 48 hours and 38 minutes, according to his petition.

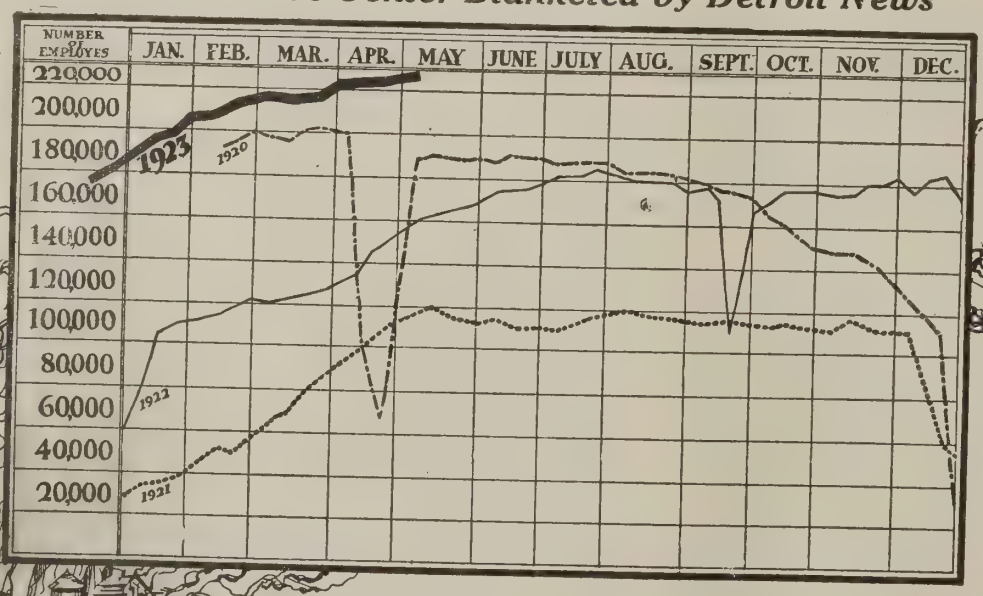
Newspaper Owner Sues Pastors

As the result of a hot controversy over the question of Sunday observance in Nanaimo, B. C., R. R. Hindmarch, owner of the Daily Herald, is suing six clergymen for slander. The Herald had said editorially: "Sunday observance to us means the right of every man and woman to observe it as he or she sees fit." The Ministerial Association then came to bat with a letter saying: "God pity Nanaimo if that is the moral standard of the Daily Herald."

COURT SAVES MAN FROM JAIL

Holds Texas Statute Void by Which Legislature Acted

Hull Youngblood, sentenced by a Texas Legislative Joint Committee to jail in Austin for contempt in refusing to testify concerning a newspaper article in which he was quoted as charging corruption in the Legislature, was released from his 20-day sentence on order of the State Court of Criminal Appeals, which held unconstitutional the statute under which he was confined, and ruled that the Legislature could not delegate authority to a committee to punish for contempt, and in any event could not commit a person for more than 48 hours.



Youngblood was committed when he failed to appear before the Legislative committee following an account in the San Antonio Light of a speech made by him before the Salesmanship Club, in which he said that most of the legislators were "hill-billies and rabbit chasers." The committee accepted the newspaper version of the speech without question.

Detroit's '23 Employment Greatest in City's History

3rd paper....	534,562	4,013,128

The News lead, while enormous, would have been greater still had it been possible to accept all advertising offered. Unfortunately lack of space necessitated omission from The News day after day of great quantities of advertising, rang-from 500 lines to 15,000 lines per issue.

NOTE the heavy black line on the chart above marked 1923. That is significant. That curve marks the greatest employment record attained by America's outstanding prosperity center. It shows that at the beginning of May, 1923, the 79 firms employing two-thirds of the factory workers, which report regularly each week to the Employers' Association of Detroit, were hiring 25,000 more workers than during the highest employment peak of 1920. And the Spring of 1920 was previously the banner employment period.

Automobile production in 1923 is the greatest in the history of the industry, and when you consider that 60% of all the automobiles made in the United States are produced in Detroit you get an inkling of Detroit prosperity.

This phenomenal prosperity is also reflected in a sweeping gain in retail sales which show an increase of 35% over last year.

National advertisers who are neglecting the Detroit field or those who have not yet planned with exceptional regard to their Detroit campaign should take steps at once to reap some of this prosperity for themselves by covering the city and surrounding territory thoroughly with The Detroit News, whose paid circulation is over 290,000 daily and over 270,000 Sunday—the greatest in the history of Michigan newspapers.

Buffalo Savings banks average more than $735 per depositor. The per capita deposits based upon the city's population is over $250.00.

The Buffalo district is the greatest lumber market in the world. At times in the yards of the city alone are piled 200,000,000 feet of lumber.

Buffalo is known as the "City of Diverse Industries," producing in quantities, 60 per cent. of all the different lines of goods recognized by the U. S. Census Bureau.

The Buffalo district is one of the most extensive producers of pig iron in the world, having over 20 large blast furnaces with a combined annual capacity of between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 tons.

Buffalo holds the wonderful record of a gain of 475 new industries in the past five years, which is a greater increase than is to be found in any other of the twenty-five first class cities of the United States except New York.

The Buffalo Market is Ideal for the National Advertiser

An ideal market situation from the national advertiser's view-point is a prosperous condition of the people and low cost in reaching the people through advertising.

Both of these factors are outstanding features of the Buffalo Market!

The people are busy and prosperous. The breadwinners of the trading area population of 800,000 are profitably employed. Buffalo, normally a city of prosperity because of wonderful diversity of industry, is booming to-day. Conditions are right for the national advertiser.

The Buffalo Evening News reaches 85% of the English reading families in the Buffalo Territory. It is the paper that serves the people most, and thus holds their confidence and their interest. It is the paper that provides the national advertiser with economical and effective advertising coverage of the Buffalo Market.

Advertising Results—

not explanations or excuses are what the advertiser has the right to expect. And results are what he receives when he places his advertising in THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS.

That advertising in THE DAILY NEWS brings results to advertisers is proved by the year-in, year-out leadership of The Daily News, among Chicago daily newspapers, in display advertising. Experienced advertisers do not continue to advertise increasingly in mediums that do not bring adequate returns.

The following figures show the distribution of total advertising among Chicago daily newspapers for the first four months of 1923, together with a comparison of these figures with those covering the same period of 1922. A study of these figures will be profitable to any advertiser in the Chicago field.

The Daily News' excess in gains over the paper having the next highest gain—The Daily Tribune.....			118,113

Not only did The Chicago Daily News print a greater volume of advertising than any of its competitors—its gains were greater despite the fact that it had its own great record to beat—a much higher record than that of any other Chicago newspaper.

This performance, in keeping with its traditional leadership in all phases of newspaper enterprise, confirms the verdict of the years with the verdict of today.

A Safe Advertising Guide

Department stores spend more money in daily newspapers than any other class of advertisers—and they cannot afford to waste a penny of the money thus spent.

They must get results—and they DO.

They have reduced advertising to a science and advertisers in any field may be assured that the medium in which the department stores place the greatest volume of their business has the circulation coverage and advertising coverage that makes it effective.

For many years—and to-day—the department stores of Chicago have placed and continue to place the greater proportion of their "must get results" advertising in The Chicago Daily News. Here, for example, are the figures for the first four months of 1923:

	Lines	Comparison Lines
The Daily News	2,050,661	2,050,661
The American	929,361	929,361
The Journal	537,216

The Daily Herald-Examiner	240,564
The Post	243,517
The Daily News excess over the next highest score, that of The American		1,121,300

It is evident, also, from the above figures that The Daily News carried considerably more than a third of ALL department store advertising in Chicago daily newspapers in this period, and more than twice as much as the daily newspaper having the next highest score.

It is the estimation of advertising experts, no less than the esteem of its readers that establish and maintain

CANADIAN PRESS AGAIN FLAYED AS COMBINE

Ottawa Journal's Defense of News Agency's Attitude Denounced as False by Liberal M. P. in Commons

Another attack on the Canadian Press, news service, was launched in the Canadian House of Commons May 9 by A. F. Healey, during debate in committee following second reading of the anti-combine bill. He declared that the recent refusal by the Canadian Press to grant a franchise in Ottawa furnished real grounds for an investigation by a registrar the moment such an official was appointed under the act. He asserted that a statement appearing in the Ottawa Journal in defense of the Canadian Press was contrary to fact.

The Journal in its issue of May 8 devoted nearly two columns to an explanation of the viewpoint of the Canadian Press. It declared that the organization had assisted Mr. Healey himself to start a daily paper in Windsor, Ont., a year ago, and that the attitude of the Liberal Member for North Essex was peculiar, to say the least. The article said in part:

The Healey exploit at Windsor was a rather remarkable one for several reasons. Only one daily paper existed there, namely, the Border Cities' Star, published by Mr. W. F. Herman. Mr. Healey determined to start an opposition paper, and did start it, namely, the Windsor Tribune. Subsequently he desired a franchise for the Tribune for the news service of the Canadian Press, and applied for it. Mr. Herman, publisher of the Border Cities' Star, who is a shareholder in the Canadian Press, opposed the granting of a franchise to Mr. Healey. Mr. Herman's opposition was unsuccessful. Mr. Healey got the franchise from the Canadian Press—and then he proceeded to sell out to Mr. Herman. So there is still only one daily paper in Windsor.

Mr. Healey's assertion in Parliament this week, therefore, that the Canadian Press assumes the right to say where a newspaper shall be started did not prevent him starting a newspaper himself; and, after he did start it, he utilized the franchise which the Canadian Press gave him to sell out to his competitor.

The Canadian Press is an association of a number of daily papers of Canada for the purpose of buying and selling news. It is a joint stock association, each member being a shareholder, and each shareholder being entitled to participate in the advantages of joint buying and selling of news. As was illustrated in Mr. Healey's own case, membership in this association has now become very important to any proposed new paper. The association has achieved a very excellent news position as regards news of Canada and the world in general, and because of the joint association this news is comparatively cheap to each member. It would cost any daily not accepted in the association a great deal more money to get equally good news.

Any daily paper which wishes to enter this co-operative body must secure a share of stock, which means getting a franchise to receive the association's news as well as to join in the expense of collecting it.

This association has nothing whatever to do for or against the starting of a new daily paper anywhere. Anybody who wishes can start a daily paper in Ottawa or anywhere else tomorrow. The Canadian Press has no power to interfere in any way. Where the Canadian Press comes in, in the case of a daily paper, is that the association may or may not accept a new-comer as a shareholder, and therefore entitled to get the association's news, which is as good and cheap because it is the joint undertaking of a considerable number of dailies.

The principle of the association as regards admitting new members is that where there is apparently an insufficient newspaper service, for instance where as in Windsor last year only one daily paper existed, a franchise for the news service of the association should not be refused to an applicant, provided the new daily applying for it give some assurance of being a bona fide enterprise. But where there appears to be already a sufficient newspaper service and good newspaper competition, the shareholders of the association do not necessarily feel themselves called upon to admit a new member to their news supply, which they have already spent a good deal of money to build up.

The case which precipitated the remarks made in Parliament on the subject of the Canadian Press and the alleged combine which the Canadian Press is accused of being, was an application for a news franchise of the Canadian Press for a new daily paper in Ottawa. This application was the result of a negotiation between the members of the Dominion Government and, curiously enough, W. F. Herman, publisher of the Border Cities' Star, to get a Liberal party organ in Ottawa. This was to be financed chiefly by Mr. Herman, but the Government was to have the editorial control and direction. The first move of Mr. Herman was to apply for a news franchise for Ottawa in the Canadian Press. Inasmuch as five daily papers already existed in Ottawa, the directors of the Canadian Press decided a couple of weeks ago not to grant the proposed additional franchise.

Mr. Herman was not in a very good position to argue strongly in the matter for the reason that when Mr. Healey, the Liberal M.P. for North Essex, had applied to the Canadian Press for a franchise in Windsor not long ago, where only one daily paper existed, Mr. Herman, the owner of that paper, had strenuously opposed the application, and in fact did succeed to the extent that before the directors of the Canadian Press would grant Mr. Healey's application, they called upon him to put up a guarantee that he was in a financial position to carry on a newspaper for at least a year. Mr. Healey did give this guarantee and did get a franchise, and, as already said, he promptly utilized it to sell out to Mr. Herman.

From all this it will be seen that the talk about a newspaper combine such as Mr. Healey indulged in in Parliament, is childish. There is no bar whatever to the starting of a daily newspaper anywhere in Canada. The only condition in which restriction exists is that a number of daily newspapers which have spent money to build up a first-class news service for themselves, are able to pick and choose as to what newcomers they shall admit to the benefit of their established co-operative business in the way of news; and that they will put no bar even in that fashion in the way of any new daily paper starting anywhere where the existing newspaper services seems to be in the nature of a monopoly was shown in Mr. Healey's own case. In other words, the Canadian Press is not a supporter of monopoly, but practically an opponent of it.

DEFENDS CANADIAN PRESS

Quebec M. P. Denies That It Controls the News

Following the attack on the Canadian Press made in the House of Commons on May 7 a strong defence of its purposes and methods was made on May 8 by Fernand Rinfret, M. P., editor of Le Canada, Montreal. He pointed out that the Canadian Press was unable to prevent the publication of any paper in any city in Canada. It could only deny the privilege of the interchange of news practised by its members. This did not constitute a combine of opinion because the opinion of any paper using the service had nothing to do with the news disseminated. When the Canadian Press was organized it simply gave a wider scope to a method already in vogue between various papers by which they exchanged news of mutual interest. Papers concerned were able to carry such news at a cheaper rate.

As an instance of freedom of opinion he instanced the reports of the debates in the House of Commons. These were carried by papers of all shades of political opinion. Yet when it came to expressing opinions on the matters in question, this was done by the editorial writers and special correspondents.

Mr. Rinfret thought that possibly too great a liberty was given to the association in the matter of admitting or excluding members and he believed that an amendment might be introduced into the charter to provide that the Canadian Press could not refuse admission to papers applying for admission under certain conditions. This might remedy the difficulty. At the same time he was quite sure that the Canadian Press could stand investigation. It would then be shown that the alleged combine was merely an arrangement whereby the Canadian public were getting news from all parts of the Dominion not of political or contentious character, at a much cheaper rate.

TO PROTECT NEWSPAPERS

Quebec Libel Law to Be Amended at Next Session

The libel law of Quebec will probably be amended at the next session, beginning in October, of the Provincial Legislature. It is planned to alter the statutes so that the "good faith" of newspapers shall be given due consideration in the courts, and the scope of actions by financially irresponsible persons limited and regulated.

COPYRIGHT BILL PUZZLE

Canadian Writers Oppose Proposed Change in Statutes

The proceedings in the Dominion Parliament on the question of revising the copyright act in such a way as to provide Canadian writers with "reasonable protection" are of a somewhat farcial nature, even the Minister in charge of the revision admitting that no one knows precisely "what it's all about."

Canadian writers are protesting against a provision similar to that in the United States regulations, stipulating that the copyrighted material must be published in the United States, and urge acceptance of the Berne convention, which has no such condition. The principal support for this proposal is from the book publishing houses.

Texas Billboard Tax Lost

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

Austin, Texas, May 14.—The Legislature defeated the Lackey bill to levy tax of 3 cents per square foot on billboards, when the measure was taken up on the closing day of the session, too late for final action.

Vetoes School Publication Bill

Governor Donahey, of Ohio, vetoed a bill authorizing Boards of Education like that in Cleveland to engage in certain kinds of publication work. The Cleveland board has been employing a director of publications, whose duties include the issuing twice a month of a paper entitled "School Topics." Governor Donahey declared the bill was too broad and permitted Boards of Education actually to engage in publication and distribution of daily newspapers. The head of the Cleveland board announced that "School Topics" would be continued, despite the veto.

STATE ADOPTS BILLBOARD FEE

Nebraska Legislature Passes Bill for Highway Permits

The State of Nebraska is going to charge for billboard advertising space along its highways. Under a bill just passed by the Legislature, no signs may be placed on public roads without a permit from the Department of Public Works, which may charge from 25 cents to $5 for each sign. The department may also remove any sign it pleases without giving cause.

The act also prohibits the painting or attaching of any advertising matter on bridges or within 300 feet of any railroad or highway crossing.

Hearst Paper Increases Stock

The Fort Worth (Tex.) Record Company, recently purchased by William R. Hearst from J. W. Allison, has filed an amendment to its charter increasing the capital stock from $1,000 to $140,000. The company, with a capital of $1,000, was organized for the purpose of liquidating the claims of the old company and placing the property in condition to be transferred to Mr. Hearst.

IF—

IF the people you want to talk to do all their business on Sundays—

IF they live in the hills of West Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina or Kentucky—

IF they inherited their purchasing habits with their social, political, theological and economic views from their grandparents—

IF, owning nothing, they regard ownership of property as a crime, and look to Soviet Russia as the shrine of popular liberty—

IF They are floaters on the tide, drifting with the ebb and flow of industry, and never arriving at a place they can really claim as "home"—

Do not advertise in the Cincinnati Times-Star

National and Local advertisers for fifteen consecutive years have proved that the Times-Star, appearing the six business days of the week, is a more effective medium than any seven-day paper in its field—

That its circulation is in and about Cincinnati, where it goes into four out of every five homes daily—

That it is progressive without being radical, at once moulding and reflecting the life, habits and aspirations of the community of which it is a part—

That it is the paper of the business executive and of the wage-worker, of the capitalist and of the laborer, standing four square for the American brand of liberty, equality and opportunity, and for no other—

That it is essentially a home paper, owned and edited by home folks for home folks, and read by home folks for the information it contains about world events and local interests, politics and sport, finance and industry, what to buy and where to buy it.

The Times-Star is pre-eminently the paper with prestige in Cincinnati, if the testimony of advertisers as expressed in display lineage is any indication of prestige. Its merchandising department is at youre service on request.

CINCINNATI TIMES-STAR

CHARLES P. TAFT, Publisher C. H. REMBOLD, Manager

Member of Audit Bureau of Circulations

The world wide news service of the United Press reaches to every corner of the earth twenty-four hours of every day and is printed in almost every language in which newspapers are published.

Why

It Is Comparatively Easy to Advertise Profitably in the United States

Population and Newspapers

2,382 daily newspapers print upward of 30,000,000 copies every week day and 20,000,000 on Sunday, to serve the 25,000,000 families making up the total of 110,000,000 population in the United States. The element of duplication to the extent of 4,000,000 on week days is made up by those who buy both a morning and an evening newspaper. The great majority of the people buy evening newspapers, the average daily output standing approximately 20,000,000 evening and 10,000,000 morning newspapers.

Statistics

Detailed information regarding the purchasing power of the people in every city and state is easily available for the use of the manufacturer desirous of finding a large market for anything for which popular demand can be created through newspaper advertising. A country with 110,000,000 population, a wealth of over $300,000,000,000, can be analyzed for development as a whole or section by section in exact accordance with money available for promotion or desire for expansion. The most wonderful and prosperous market place in the world, of limitless possibilities, is wide open for experimental campaigns at lower cost than anywhere else.

Circulations

In the United States every worth-while daily newspaper is a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, an organization controlled by important national advertisers, which regularly audits them under standardized rules and regulations every year, and verifies all publishers' statements regarding circulations. The A. B. C. reports clearly show the distribution of a newspaper's circulation, show whether artificial stimulation has been employed, and gives much intimate information of vital importance to the space buyer.

Advertising Rates

In the United States the advertising rates of our important newspapers are as fixed and definite as their circulation statements. All rates within space possibilities of the general advertiser are plainly printed on a standard rate card adopted by the American Association of Advertising Agents and American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and it is an unwritten rule that all advertisers secure the same rates for the same service. Any reduction in rates automatically applies to all advertisers using the same amount of space under like conditions.

Co-operation

In the United States the advertising managers of nearly all our daily newspapers, men familiar with local conditions in every city in the country, are always ready and willing to co-operate with a distant general advertiser to furnish dependable reports regarding local sales possibilities, lists of dealers handling any specified line of goods, and provide a service much more quickly and effectively than otherwise would be possible. Letters of inquiry can be employed to secure information in a few weeks which it would require months of time and hundreds of thousands of dollars of expense to gather.

An Interesting Glimpse at the Remarkably Low Rates of Newspapers in the United States

Compare Them With Charges Anywhere Else in the World

30,825,000 of the 110,000,000 people in the United States live in the 17 cities listed below or in the immediate suburban territory adjoining them. These are the richest market places in the richest country in the world.

The newspapers listed below, merely for the purpose of demonstration, have been selected to reach the greatest purchasing power in each of the great industrial and commercial centres of the country. It is an evening newspaper list except where it is compulsory for the advertiser to use both morning and evening newspapers printed by the same concern.

The circulation figures are those from Government Reports for the six months ended September 30, 1922, and the rates from the Standard Rate and Data Service for April, 1923.

The milline rate is the cost for reaching 1,000,000 buyers of newspapers. (Circulation divided into advertising rate.) Most of the newspapers make a flat rate, but for purpose of uniformity the 5,000 line contract rate is applied in other cases.

W. A. WHITE EDITORIAL A PRIZE-WINNER

Pulitzer Awards Also Bestowed On Memphis Commercial Appeal for Anti-Klan Fight, and Alva Johnston, Reporter

For the second year in succession a campaign against the Ku Klux Klan won for a newspaper the Pulitzer prize for disinterested and meritorious public service. This award, which last year went to the New York World, was this week bestowed upon the Memphis Commercial Appeal.

William Allen White, editor of the Emporia (Kan.) Gazette, took the prize for the best editorial article of the year, his entry being the widely quoted "To an Anxious Friend" article, in which he commented upon his arrest for alleged violation of the Kansas Industrial Court act.

Alva Johnston, now of the New York Herald staff, won the award for the best example of a reporter's work, with his stories for the New York Times of the convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science last December. Mr. Johnston's reports were exhaustive and presented in language intelligible to the non-scientific mind the four days' proceedings of the convention. Space will not permit adequate reproduction of his writing, which appeared in the New York Times of December 27-30, 1922.

This limitation also applies to the prize-winning campaign of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, which extended over several months in cartoons, news and editorial articles. The editorial by Mr. White which was adjudged best follows:

TO AN ANXIOUS FRIEND

"You tell me that law is above freedom of utterance. And I reply that you can have no wise laws nor free enforcement of wise laws unless there is free expression of the wisdom of the people—and, alas, there folly with it. But if there is freedom, folly will die of its own poison, and the wisdom will survive. That is the history of the race. It is the proof of man's kinship with God. You say that freedom of utterance is not for time of stress, and I reply with the sad truth that only in time of stress is freedom of utterance in danger. No one questions it in calm days, because it is not needed. And the reverse is true also; only when free utterance is suppressed is it needed, and when it is needed, it is most vital to justice. Peace is good. But if you are interested in peace through force and without free discussion—that is to say, free utterance decently and in order—your interest in justice is slight. And peace without justice is tyranny, no matter how you may sugar coat it with expediency. This state today is in more danger from suppression than from violence, because in the end, suppression leads to violence. Violence, indeed, is the child of Suppression. Whoever pleads for justice helps to keep the peace; and whoever tramples upon the plea for justice, temperately made in the name of peace, only outrages peace and kills something fine in the heart of man which God put there when we got our manhood. When that is killed, brute meets brute on each side of the line.

"So, dear friend, put fear out of your heart. This nation will survive, this state will prosper, the orderly business of life will go forward if only men can speak in whatever way given them to utter what their hearts hold—by voice, by posted card, by letter or by press. Reason never has failed men. Only force and repression have made the wrecks in the world."

No awards were made for the best history of the services rendered to the public by the American press during the preceding year or for the best cartoon. The announcement of the awards follows:

For the most disinterested and meritorious public service rendered by any American newspaper during the year, a gold medal costing $500. Jury: Professor John W. Cunliffe, Professor Roscoe C. E. Brown, Henry W. Sackett.

The medal was awarded to the Memphis Commercial Appeal, Memphis, Tenn., for its courageous attitude in the publication of cartoons and the handling of news in reference to the operations of the Ku Klux Klan.

For the best editorial article written during the year, the test of excellence being clearness of style, moral purpose, sound reasoning and power to influence public opinion in the right direction, $500. Jury: Professor Roscoe C. E. Brown, Professor John W. Cunliffe, Associate Harold de W. Fuller.

The prize was awarded to William Allen White for an editorial entitled, "To An Anxious Friend," in the Emporia Gazette, Emporia, Kan., July 27, 1922.

For the best example of a reporter's work during the year; the test being strict accuracy, terseness, the accomplishment of some public good commanding public attention and respect, $1,000. Jury: Professor Charles Phillips Cooper, Associate Carl Dickey, Associate Allen Sinclair Will.

The recommendation of the jury, confirmed by the teaching staff, is that the prize be awarded to Alva Johnston for his reports of the proceedings of the convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science held in Cambridge, Mass., in December, 1922, published in the New York Times December 27 to 30, 1922.

For the American novel published during the year which shall best present the wholesome atmosphere of American life and the highest standard of American manners and manhood, $1,000. Jury: Jefferson B. Fletcher, Samuel M. Crothers, Bliss Perry.

The jury recommends for the award of the Prize in the Novel, "One of Ours," by Willa Cather, published by Alfred Knopf, Inc., New York, 1922.

For the original American play performed in New York, which shall best represent the educational value and power of the stage in raising the standard of good morals, good taste and good manners, $1,000. Jury: William Lyon Phelps, Clayton Hamilton, Owen Johnson.

The jury recommends for the award of the Prize in the Drama, "Icebound," by Owen Davis, produced at the Sam H. Harris Theater in New York during the season 1922-1923.

For the best book of the year upon history of the United States, $2,000. Jury: Worthington C. Ford, John B. McMaster, Charles Downer Hazen.

The jury recommends for the award of the Prize in History, "The Supreme Court in United States History," by Charles Warren, published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston, Mass., 1922.

For the best American biography teaching patriotic and unselfish services to the people, illustrated by an eminent example, excluding, as too obvious, the names of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, $1,000. Jury: Maurice Francis Egan, William Roscoe Thayer, William Allen White.

The jury recommends for the award of the Prize in Biography, "The Life and Letters of Walter H. Page," by Burton J. Hendrick, published by Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N. Y., 1922.

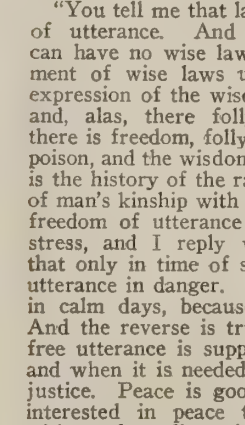
For the best volume of verse published during the year by an American author, $1,000. Jury: Wilbur L. Cross, Richard Burton, Ferris Greenslet.

The jury recommends for the award of the Prize in Verse, the following by Edna St. Vincent Millay: "The Ballad of the Harp-Weaver," printed for Frank Shay, New York, 1922; "A Few Pigs from Thistles," published by Frank Shay, New York, 1922; "Eight Sonnets in American Poetry, 1922: A Miscellany," published by Harcourt, Brace & Co., of New York City.

Traveling Scholarships

Three traveling scholarships, having the value of $1,500 each, to graduates of the School of Journalism, who shall have passed their examinations with the highest honor and are otherwise most deserving, to enable each of them to spend a year in Europe, to study the social, political and moral conditions of the people, and the character and principles of the European press. On the nomination of the teaching staff of the School of Journalism, the following were appointed:

1. Geneva Bertha Seybold, Topeka, Kan. 2. Lee Mills Merriman, Chicago, Ill. 3. Roswell Sessoms Britton, Soochow, China.



Alternates: 1. Paul Frederichsen, Clinton, Iowa. 2. Charles Ruggles Smith, Cambridge, Mass. 3. Josephina Lula Chase, Bakersfield, Cal.

An annual scholarship, having the value of $1,500, to the student of music in America who may be deemed the most talented and deserving, in order that he may continue his studies with the advantage of European instruction, on the nomination of a jury composed of members of the teaching staff of the Department of Music in Columbia University and of the teaching staff of the Institute of Musical Art. Jury: Professor Daniel Gregory Mason, Professor Walter Henry Hall, Frank Damrosch.

The jury recommends for the award of the music scholarship, Wintter Watts of Brooklyn, New York, for a suite for orchestra entitled "Etchings," and for a dramatic ballad for voice and orchestra entitled "The Vinegar Man."

An annual scholarship, having the value of $1,500, to an art student in America, who shall be certified as the most promising and deserving by the National Academy of Design, with which the Society of American Artists has been lately merged.

The Society of American Artists and the National Academy of Design recommend for this scholarship Henry Hensche of Chicago, Ill., who is a student of the National Academy of Design Schools.

—Lord Robert Cecil

in his recent American campaign of explaining the operation of the League of Nations, is said to have delivered over twenty public speeches in as many cities.

Without the Daily Newspapers the forceful addresses of our distinguished visitor would have been powerless.

Through the Daily Newspapers Lord Robert Cecil reached instantly and simultaneously national—yes, international ears.

If the messages were spread by word of mouth alone or through delayed publication, how impotent they would be! The messages in themselves do not change—and yet without the Daily Newspapers, they are as nothing!

This powerful force of Daily Newspapers, at once world-wide and local, can sell merchandise—your merchandise. There is no comparable advertising medium.

"NAT" WRIGHT EXPIRES OF HEART DISEASE

Editorial Manager of the Toledo Blade Was Proudest of His Experience as Spanish War Correspondent

Nathaniel Curwin Wright, aged 53, editorial manager of the Toledo Blade and editor of the Newark (N. J.) Star-Eagle, died in Toledo, May 13. Mr. Wright had been ill of heart disease two years. After treatment in a Toledo hospital, he apparently had recovered, but became ill in New York last fall. Most of the winter was spent in Arizona, but his gains there were only temporary. At his own request he was taken home for his last days.

NATHANIEL C. WRIGHT

Mr. Wright began his newspaper career in 1890 as a reporter for the Chicago Daily News. Before going to the Associated Press in 1893 he served as assistant city editor and editorial writer. He was with the Associated Press during its historic fight with the United Press, acting as night manager, day manager, and chief field correspondent. Of no experience was he more proud than that as a correspondent during the war in Cuba. He had charge of fitting out two different dispatch boats, and, during a race to a cable station, he wrote the Associated Press' account of the crushing of Admiral Cervera's fleet.

In 1900 Mr. Wright became managing editor of the Indianapolis Sentinel. After three years he took over the office of editor and publisher of the Indianapolis Journal. With the sale and liquidation of that property, he went to the Cleveland Leader as managing editor. After a year he was made editor-in-chief and in 1907 he assumed the presidency of the company, his partner being Harry S. Talmadge. With Mr. Talmadge he undertook the operation of the Toledo Blade, then suffering from the effects of the panic of 1907-08. The circulation has increased fivefold over that at the time he took charge. Again with Mr. Talmadge and others he bought the Newark Star-Eagle and later the Detroit Journal. The sale of the Journal last July was said to be at the highest price ever paid for the goodwill of a newspaper.

Mr. Wright had unusual aptness for making friends. His speech was characterized by illustrations that fitted exactly to whatever meaning he wished to convey. As an editorial writer he had a style commanding attention and influence. His courage was undaunted, bringing him the friendship of Theodore Roosevelt, which lasted to the hour of the ex-President's death.

Among many telegrams received by Mr. Wright's relatives and associates was one from President Harding, in which he said:

"Ohio loses an able and forceful citizen."

His widow, a sister, Miss Edith Wright, Toledo, and a nephew, Howard Wright, Newark, N. J., survive Mr. Wright.

REV. DR. J. H. ODELL DIES

Former Editor Scranton Tribune-Republican, and Outlook Writer

The Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Odell, aged 76, for a time editor of the Scranton (Pa.) Tribune-Republican and late political editorial writer for the Philadelphia Public Ledger and Evening Ledger died May 15 in Birmingham, England.

For ten years he was chaplain of the Thirteenth Pennsylvania Infantry and during the World War was war correspondent for the Outlook. At one time he held a pastorate in Troy, N. Y.

GEORGE WURTS DEAD AT 94

Long Connection With Newark, Brooklyn and Paterson Newspapers

George Wurts, aged 94, for many years editor of the Paterson (N. J.) Press and associate editor of the Paterson Press-Guardian, died May 17. Mr. Wurts began his newspaper work in 1861 with the old Newark Advertiser. He remained with that newspaper a little more than a year and then accepted a position with the Newark Mercury, of which he became editor a year later. Two years later, Mr. Wurts went to the Brooklyn Standard-Union as associate editor.

GEORGE WURTS

He then acquired a half interest in the Paterson Press and became editor of the Press, remaining until its consolidation with the Paterson Guardian, when he was made associate editor. In addition to his newspaper activities, Mr. Wurts served as secretary of the New Jersey Senate in 1880-1882. On November 4, he became state commissioner of banking and insurance and in 1897 was appointed secretary of state, serving five years in that office. In 1886 Mr. Wurts was president of the New Jersey Editorial Association. He was ill only a short time, attending to his editorial duties until a few weeks ago. He is survived by two sons, one of whom, William L. R. Wurts, is music editor of the Newark Star-Eagle.

It Will Be a Wonderful Summer in Los Angeles, the ALL-YEAR MARKET!

THE growth of advertising in a community shows the atmospheric pressure of prosperity.

In April The Los Angeles Examiner scooped the morning field in advertising gains with a total climb above the same month in 1922, of 451,339 lines!

Enthusiasm, prosperity, circulation, cooperation and merchandising service did this.

In the first quarter of this year FOUR newspapers of Los Angeles gained 668,066 lines MORE advertising than the SEVENTEEN big newspapers of New York City. That's prosperity!

50,000 more people living in Los Angeles so far this year, and 25,000 more scheduled for summer vacations from which most of them will never go home!

Is Your Advertising Yours?

A Brass Tacks Talk on Advertising

By Wm. H. Rankin

DOES your advertising represent you—or merely some vague shadow of you?

Is the individuality of your concern built into your advertising in the same way that it is built into your product?

Your product is you. You have put yourself into it. It is an embodiment of your ideas, beliefs and characteristics. It has personality—your personality. Labelled or unlabelled, it could always be recognized as yours.

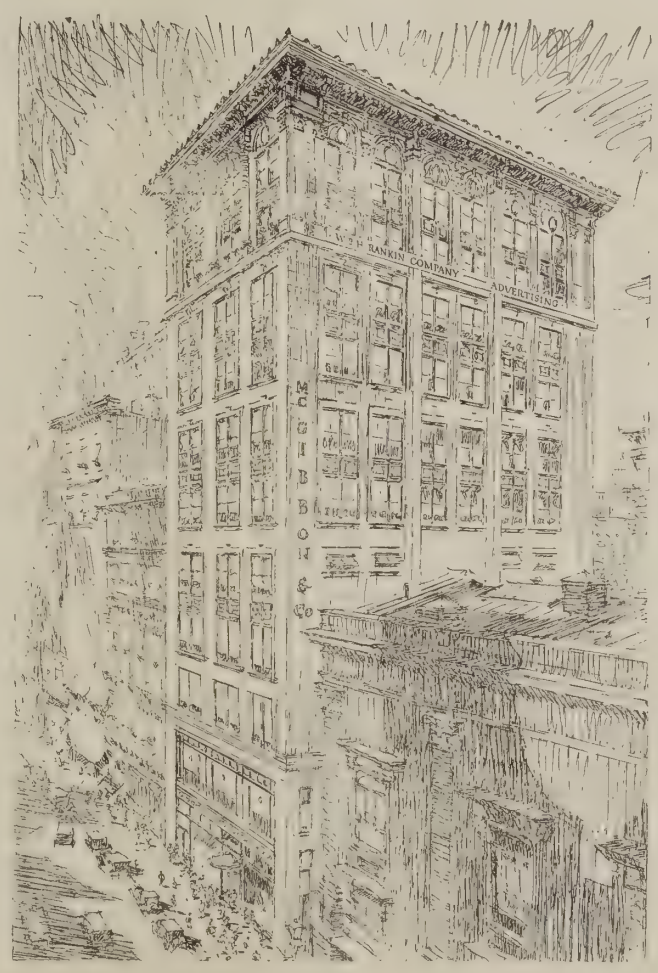
It represents you faithfully to the public. Every manufactured article does this. We talk of "letting the goods speak for themselves," but manufactured goods do more than speak for themselves. They reveal also the character of the manufacturer.

Knowing this, we would not dream of letting any goods go out with your name that were not properly representative of you.

What of your advertising? Is it also yours, in the same sense? Does your personality speak in it? Besides telling its own story does it also reflect the policies and character of your house? Without your name would it be recognized as yours?

Or is it merely a grouping of words and pictures—correct enough in themselves, but with no more individuality than a postage stamp?

Importance of the Overtone



The value of any important advertisement lies as much in what it suggests as in what it says. It should, of course, present certain facts simply and well but it can—and should—do much more.

By the very manner of that presentation it should reflect the personality of the advertiser. It should breathe his very spirit and vibrate with his individuality.

Let us point our moral by the advertisement of any of our own clients. Look, for example, at the advertising of Goodrich Tires, Eveready Flashlight, Columbia Batteries, Diamond Tires, Haynes Automobiles, Scott's Mineralava, Hartman's Trunks, or any other on our list.

We hope that you will agree with us that these advertisements do more than merely present facts pleasantly. We believe that you can see in them also the personality of the concerns signing them. They are there, themselves, in print. If their advertisements impress you as sincere and reliable it is because the concerns themselves are sincere and reliable. There is nothing in the advertisement that isn't in the concern or the goods.

We write advertising—not fiction.

New York City Home of the Wm. H. Rankin Co.

British Delegates to the 1923 Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World are cordially invited to visit and make use of the above offices during their stay in New York and receive a welcome worthy of their visit.

This means that we can accept only such clients whose personality and policy are worth portrayal. It is also why such clients have succeeded with us and why we have succeeded with them.

Advertising of this kind cannot be done in any haphazard, superficial way, nor can it be done by any ordinary staff. It needs really exceptional men, working in the closest possible contact with the client, and with conditions.

We have an exceptional staff and twenty-five years' experience has taught us how to be a part of the organization of the client. With Mr. Wilbur D. Nesbit and his associates in Chicago and Mr. Robert E. Rinehart and his writing-staff in New York we have a corps of which we can be proud. The art-work is in the hands of that master of advertising design, Mr. Myron C. Perley and his most capable assistants.

The work of these men is founded on and guided by the researches of a Merchandising Department, headed by Mr. H. A. Groth. Seven offices in as many principal cities and more than 1,000 representatives in as many smaller cities and towns give us—and our clients—close, continuous contact with every part of the United States and Canada.

We are particularly anxious to secure as clients three or four British advertisers who desire to win the American market. We know it from A to Z—not alone through our own representatives above mentioned—but also through nearly ten thousand more workers on the Merchandising Departments of the leading daily and weekly newspapers. A quarter-century's successful experience with these publications enables us to be assured of their immediate interest in any new product we have to advertise. This applies as well to the Agricultural Press, the Business Trade Papers, the Outdoor Sign people and the Street Railway Advertising Companies.

We have just issued the June number of our House Organ "Brass Tacks." It gives a fairly good insight into the scope and method of our work. We shall be glad to send it to any interested advertiser.

NEWSPAPER PUBLICITY STUNT GOES BIG

Washington Times and Herald Impress Baseball Audience With Excellence of News Service

By W. C. Shelton,

Circulation Director, Washington Times and Herald

Newspaper publicity is probably harder to put over than any other form of advertising for the simple reason that newspapers are so busy grinding other people's axes that they very often neglect their own.

There is always a way to do this, but the way is not always clear. There is no stock mode of procedure because conditions vary in each locality, but examples are cropping up now and again, as witness a progressive bit of publicity staged by the Washington Times and Herald before an audience of 24,800 paid admissions to the opening American League baseball game this season. Two thousand other souls were deadheads, but deadheads read newspapers the same as cash customers. Everybody was immensely impressed.

First, let us introduce to you "Skillet" Finn, Esq.—a sporting page feature writer who is the counterpart in Washington of "Bugs" Baer in New York, and who is known in the Capital City almost as well as President Harding himself. Come to think of it, "Skillet" Finn, Esq., which is not the name under which he was chrisened, and "Bugs" Baer started their editorial careers together and are of the same humorous school of journalism. In their early days they lived and starved and raved together until "Bugs" got the call of the Big City, leaving "Skillet" the exclusive rights to Washington and all contiguous territory.

So, beginning on the theory that "Skillet" Finn, Esq., was the best or next-best known man in Washington, an acrostic contest—a letter arrangement competition planned in the circulation department—was conducted under "Skillet's" chaperonage, lasting six weeks, over which period he gave away a little over 150 baseball tickets for the opening game, or four tickets a day to successful writers of acrostics. The basis for each acrostic was the name of a player on the Washington American League team. There were three winners announced every day, and the first winner received two baseball tickets to the opening game, and the second and third winners, one ticket each. There was no entrance fee and only two rules, viz., the deadline for closing each successive acrostic name and the ironclad rule that the acrostics when completed must refer to baseball.

"Skillet" averaged 672 letters a day over a period of six weeks, the acrostics on the names of popular players like Walter Johnson, "Donie" Bush, Stanley Harris and Nick Altrock often soaring over the 1,000 mark. In the end he had something like 168 ticket winners, and during the course of the contest, "Skillet" invited suggestions from the winners as to how the opening baseball day might be turned into a circus or carnival for the lucky ticket winners, and also asking as many as possible to offer suggestions for stunts or acts which they would be willing to put on themselves. He got 16 first class stunts out of the winners; also a "Spark Plug" act and others representing comics in the Times and Herald put on by members of the circulation department.

Led by the Times-Herald Newsboys' Band, a circulation department organization, these acts occupied fully 20 minutes of the public's time immediately before President Harding threw out the first ball. Every act had been rehearsed and went off in professional fashion, and encores would have been taken time and again if it had not been approaching game time.

After the parade around the field and the stunts in back of home plate, the party filed into its alloted section where seats were grouped under a 60-foot sign which read "'Skillet' Squirrel Section, the Washington Times and Herald." The Times-Herald Band played between innings, being the only band in the throng and thereby calling repeated attention to the stunts which preceded.

That is not all.

Here is where the other departments of the paper functioned to make the biggest sporting event in Washington during the year a real Times-Herald day.

Pictures of the "Skillet" Finn, Esq., Squirrel Circus were taken under the direct supervision of Harry Coleman, head of the Hearst photographic and art departments in Washington, as were plays during the first and second innings.

Before the seventh inning, a special edition of the Times, carrying a full front page of views of the crowd and plays of the early innings of the game, was on sale at the ball park. Photographs were developed, engravings made and transportation of the finished paper from the office to the ball park was completed in 70 minutes.

Five thousand of these newspapers were sold between the first half of the seventh inning and the end of the game, and a little girl dressed as "Miss Washington Times" in muslin which had been run through the newspaper presses, presented President Harding personally with copies of the edition.

At the moment the papers reached the park, the bugler from the Times-Herald band stood beneath the regular Times-Herald sign on the right field fence and announced "assembly." Immediately a canvas sign unrolled from the top of the fence announcing that copies of the Times—the afternoon medium—containing a full page of pictures of the game were then on sale in the park.

The public simply devoured those papers, and men and women in and out of the newspaper business declared it the greatest bit of journalistic enterprise they had ever witnessed. Lester Thompson of Barnum & Bailey's Circus declared that "Skillet" Finn's circus and pageant was a knockout, even from a professional eye.

The game was over at 5:47, and the crowd filed out of the park realizing that one of the greatest bits of advertising by a thoroughly up-to-the-minute newspaper had been successfully impressed on the minds of about 26,000 people.

As can be observed, the most minute co-operation between the photographic, engraving, editorial, composing, press and circulation departments, all under the supervision of G. Logan Payne, publisher, was necessary to carry out this feat.

The acrostic contest met with such wonderful success that the circulation department has again commandeered the services of "Skillet" Finn, Esq., from the editorial department in putting on a baseball picture puzzle and slogan contest, gaining the advantage of thousands of friends who have become followers of "Skillet" Finn, Esq., during his first contest.

MYTHICAL CLUB'S FEATURE

National Organizations Inquire About Helena, Mont., Creation

When Helena, home city of the Montana State Fair, was asked to contribute $2,500 in prizes for this year's fair, the Rowanis Club, a newspaper feature in the Record-Herald here, was the first to respond. The club, conducted by Ernest J. Immel, city editor, offered $10 for the turkey with the best singing voice. A committee of musicians will do the judging.

The Rowanis club is 15 months old. For the first year Mr. Immel was recognized as its president, and as such he made two addresses at the Helena Kiwanis Club, explaining the purposes of his club. Rowanis meets each week for speeches and discussions. Its mythical nature, though apparent, has puzzled or fooled many people here.

A few days ago Kiwanis international headquarters wrote to the secretary in Helena, inquiring about Rowanis, of which it had been informed through a press clipping bureau. Last Summer there was correspondence between international officials of Rotary and Kiwanis concerning the upstart of Rowanis. Recently a Rowanerce Club, patterned on Rowanis, was formed by the Miles City (Mont.) Star.

CIRCULATION NEWS AND VIEWS

JOHN MACDONALD of Valley City, N. D., has been made circulation manager of the Ann Arbor Times News.

The Baltimore Evening Sun Service Club, headed by the Evening Sun Newsboys' Band, inaugurated a six-weeks' campaign for 100 per cent service into the homes on the routes of its members by attending the Rivoli Theatre in a body, being given a reception by Victor Herbert, the composer.

J. Omansky, formerly country circulator and promotion man of the Cleveland Press, is now in charge of the Circulation department of the Cleveland Times and Commercial.

The Omaha Bee is issuing a pink supplement along with its night final.

The Ogdensburg (N. Y.) Daily News has launced a circulation campaign, which is being conducted by the Pultz Company of Reading, Pa., under supervision of Richard Kelly.

Mayor Schwab of Buffalo has intimated he will sign the New York Legislature's bill giving Buffalo City Council authority to license news stands. The stands were driven from the streets about three years ago through an action begun by the Buffalo Commercial.

"Where Prosperity Begins" is the new slogan selected for Springfield, O., following a contest conducted by the two local newspapers in co-operation with the Real Estate Board.

During "Boys' Week," May 14-20, the San Francisco Bulletin was conducted by boy editors. The boys had the proper newspaper office titles. The usual staff of the Bulletin, of course, kept tabs on the youngsters.

The Indianapolis Star is sponsoring the sale of lots in a newly created lake resort near Knightstown, Ind. Lots are sold at $58.50 each with a first payment of $8.50, with which the purchaser must subscribe for six months to the Star. The newspaper is directing the laying out of boulevards and erection of boat houses and other features.

The Omaha (Neb.) Bee staged its "Better Homes" exposition April 30 to May 5. Hunt Cook, lecturer and demonstrator on art in the home, in twelve portable rooms, plus furniture, demonstrated an ugly looking room, then, with the same furniture, created a beautiful room.

The American News Company, through various purchases, has assembled a plot of 26,000 square feet at Spring and Varick streets, New York City.

High Pressure Gauges

WHEN a locomotive refuses to develop the speed it should, the engineer's first move is to look at its steam gauge.

And when a newspaper fails to gain the popularity and advertising patronage it should, its publisher's first move is to look at its steam gauge—classified advertising.

Display advertisers have their eyes on this sure measure of reader-interest and pulling-power. Wise publishers watch it even more closely, because they know that high classified "pressure" means growing circulation and greater local and foreign display patronage.

The National Standard methods of promotion build classified advertising that gauges a newspaper's producing power as it should be.

We are serving over one hundred newspapers in the United States and Canada. Our booklets "The Undiscovered Country" and "Architects of Classified Advertising," explain our service. Write for them.

A Great Force for International Accord

ON the eve of the Disarmament Conference, The New York Herald sent Louis Seibold to study conditions in Japan and his articles were used as basic information in drawing up the Four-Power Treaty in Washington.

John McHugh Stuart, London correspondent of The Herald, was instrumental in bringing Lloyd George and De Valera together for the settlement from which grew the Irish Free State.

In a dispatch by Francis McCullagh The New York Herald gave the world the first news of Lenin's recession from Communism.

The New York Herald startled America with the first detailed story of the trial of the Roman Catholic prelates in Moscow, the execution of Mgr. Butchkavitch and the first comprehensive uncensored analysis of conditions in Russia today.

The first complete text of the Chester Grant by Turkey was published in The New York Herald. The Herald published an exclusive story telling the part of the German industrial leader Stinnes in causing the most recent large drop in German Exchange.

The New York Herald was the pioneer among American newspapers in establishing an extensive foreign news service and continues to promote international accord by bringing to the American people accurate and temperate news of European developments, reported from all sides of every question without the tincture of nationalistic propaganda.

Only through its superior international news connections including fully equipped Bureaus under the direction of competent correspondents in the important Capitals could The Herald have performed the recent feats of international journalism recorded here.

Such achievements make The New York Herald essential to men of large affairs, who mold public opinion, and who with their families make up the high quality newspaper circulation sought by advertisers local, national and international, who wish to reach large numbers of prosperous and intelligent people.

A SERVICE THAT COVERS THE

THE fact that the Linotype "greets the sun in its course around the world" may not at first thought seem personally important to the Linotype-user in America or England. But it is. His own machine serves him so well because it has been made so simple and so sound that men in Iceland and Singapore, India, Africa, and the South Seas, far from mechanical assistance, can operate it without trouble. The organization that keeps the distant machines supplied so that they never have to stop work is the same that is behind his Linotype, no matter where he is or what he may require. All over the world there are shops with huge "batteries" of Linotypes, and Linotype service is on a scale to meet their large demands. But the Linotype principle today is what it was in the beginning, thirty-five years ago—the principle of looking after the single machine in the smallest shop. The Company does not sell a Linotype and forget it. Behind them all is an organization that anticipates the printing conditions of the future in order to keep every Linotype-user in the forefront of business. The two hemispheres below show locations of the principal Linotype agencies. The factories in Manchester and in Brooklyn are equipped to supply every need of the more than 45,500 Linotypes now in use. The agencies throughout the world are prepared to deliver Linotype service to users wherever and whenever it is needed.

A feature of the week will be a reunion of M. U. Alumni who have had newspaper experience in foreign countries. They will include: James McClain, formerly in Japan and China, but now of New York; High J. Schuck, from Russia, and Frank P. Hedges, Peking.

Another of the famous Journalism Week banquets will close the six days. It will be a "Made in Manchuria" affair, in which all the principal foods will be from that country, and served in Manchurian style.

SCHOOL TO TEACH CANONS

"Ethics" to Supplement Journalists' Creed in Missouri "U"

The faculty of the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri has accepted the Canons of Journalism, recently adopted by the American Society of Newspaper Editors. They will form a part of the regular course of instruction.

"The canons will not take the place of the Journalists' Creed, which has been in use since the beginning of the School of Journalism, 15 years ago," Dean Walter Williams said. "It will supplement and amplify it and be of larger service in helping to mold the thought and life of the new generation of students."

N. D. JOURNALISM COURSE

Full Department Leading to Bachelor of Arts Degree Established

A full department of journalism leading to the degree of bachelor of arts in journalism was established at the University of North Dakota, Grand Forks, recently.

The new course is an outgrowth of a journalism division offering a minor of sixteen credits which was established two years ago. Under the new organization a student must complete the required work of the regular four-year course, including at least twenty-four credits in journalism studies. A new requirement was added to those regularly imposed in the courses in journalism when a secondary regulation was passed making it necessary for the student in the course in journalism to take a minor in one of the social sciences, history, economics, political science, or sociology. This ruling was made to insure the student a background for the interpretation of the news values most closely related to government and community welfare.

The journalism department is under the direction of Lawrence W. Murphy, a graduate of the course in journalism of the University of Wisconsin. The instruction offered includes reporting, editing, feature writing, editorial writing, history and ethics of journalism, practice journalism, survey of journalism, advertising, and illustration. The enrollment this year is 117.

STUDENT EDITORS EXCEL

Syracuse Undergraduates Get Out Geneva Times on Time

Three 12-page editions of the Geneva (N. Y.) Times were issued complete and on time by students from the department of journalism at Syracuse University on May 9. This was the second annual experiment of taking over a newspaper for a day, and the successful way in which the students handled the editorial reins proved again that classroom work in the college can stand a severe test in the practical field of newspaper publishing.

The 54-mile trip to Geneva by auto from Syracuse started at 5 o'clock on the morning of May 9. The staff of twenty-two consisted of nine co-eds and thirteen young men. A few of the executives and feature writers went to Geneva the night before to outline the city beats and news sources. None of the students knew anything about the city to which they were assigned.

Freedom to change the make-up and style of the paper was granted by W. A. Gracey, president, and G. B. Williams, secretary. It resulted in changing the pages about and putting local stories on the front page.

The return trip took twenty-two tired but happy students back to Syracuse before 11:30 p. m.

The student staff was composed of the following:

Editor-in-chief, Mabel G. Parker, Catskill, N. Y.; Telegraph editor, Simon Kneller, Newark, N. J.; managing editor, Dorothy Whitnall, Syracuse; city editor, Samuel Cahan, Syracuse; social and personal, Jeanette Ross, Syracuse; dramatic and literary, Gertrude Greene, Pittsburgh; sports, Phillip Schwartz, Gloversville, N. Y.; Lawrence Robinson, Mechanicsville, N. Y.; finance and markets, Selwyn Kershaw, Sanford, Me.; correspondence, Reginald F. Torrey, Syracuse; columnist, E. Rolfe Daniels, Watervilet, N. Y.; copy desk, Mildred Parker, Catskill, N. Y.; Ronald Jagger, Clark Mills, N. Y.; Margaret Lancer, Seneca Falls, N. Y.; reporters, William Clough, Manlius, N. Y.; Doris Stillman, Olean, N. Y.; William C. LaFevre, Beaver Falls, N. Y.; Wayne Thomas, Factoryville, Pa.; Walter McKenna, Syracuse, N. Y.; Ruth Sullivan, Gouvernour, N. Y.; Margaret Williams, Jersey City; Wilbur Saylor, Johnstown, Pa.; Rose Buck, Pittsburgh.

KANSAS HIGH SCHOOL AWARDS

Best Examples of Reporter's Work Is on Pratt Mirror

The Department of Journalism, University of Kansas, has announced awards in its second annual high school paper contest as follows:

First Division—For the best example of a reporter's work: The Mirror, Pratt High School.

Second Division—For the best original editorial: The Herald, Howard High School.

Third Division—For the best record of service to a high school: The El Doradon, El Dorado High School.

Fourth Division—For the best record on methods of securing and handling advertising: The Pantograph, Kansas City High School.

Students Get Out Daily

AUSTIN, May 1.—Journalism students of the University of Texas handled the news departments of the Austin Statesman and the Austin American today, gathering the news, editing, headwriting and making-up.

WHAT OTHER JOURNALISM SCHOOLS ARE DOING

THE journalism students of Kansas State Agricultural College manned the Topeka Daily Capital news staff for one day recently, doing the work of the day side personnel.

Five hundred and forty students are now enrolled in the Department of Journalism at the University of Wisconsin. There are 300 students majoring in the four-year course.

An extension course in newswriting has been begun in Portland, Ore., under the direction of the University of Oregon, Eugene, Ore., by George Turnbull of the faculty. This is the first course in journalism to be offered by the university in Portland.

W. E. Drips, professor in the department of journalism at the Iowa State College, at Ames, has resigned.

Josef W. Hall, formerly a correspondent in China for the Ledger Syndicate and the Chicago Tribune and the New York Times, has joined the teaching staff of the University of Washington, School of Journalism. He will teach a class in the work of the foreign correspondent.

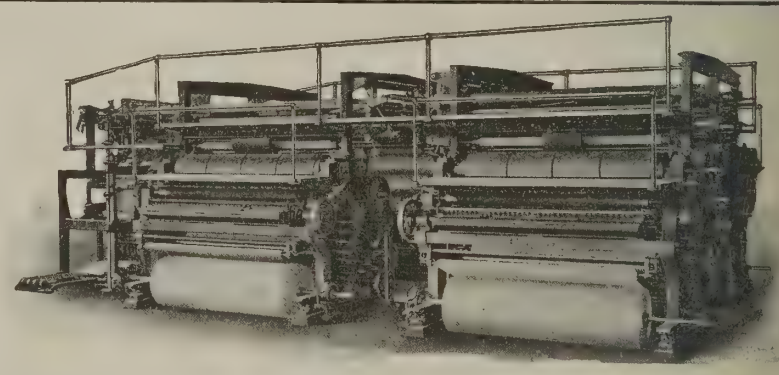
George A. Montgomery, former instructor in journalism at the Kansas State Agricultural College, has been chosen by the board of education to fill the vacancy of journalism instructor at the Kansas City Manual Training High School.

Students of the Medill School of Journalism of Northwestern University will this semester try their hands as reporters, copy readers and editors of a "Chicago daily newspaper." Although their journal, The Medillian, will never be published, it will be in the editorial department a complete reproduction of a metropolitan daily paper. Students will act in all the capacities of a metropolitan newspaper organization, from "covering" actual news events to making up the paper in "dummy" form. A large class room in the downtown Northwestern building, 31 West Lake street, has been arranged as the Medillian's news room.

The Department of Journalism, New York University, has begun a series of lectures by Alexander Woollcott, drama editor of the New York Herald, dealing with the principles of dramatic criticism. This department has added a course in practical publicity conducted by Edward Bernays.

Maxwell Aley, formerly managing editor of the Century Magazine, has joined the New York University Department of Journalism faculty.

The journalism course at Ohio State University has recently been made a four years' course instead of two years, by action of the board of trustees, upon the recommendation of administrative council of the university.



The University of Minnesota has established a news service which will supply news of accomplishment and discoveries of the faculty and students of the university.

Pei-Yy Chien of the School of Journalism at the University of Missouri has been awarded the prize of $50 for an editorial essay on "China Should Be Included in Any Plan for World Financial Readjustment." This prize is offered twice a year by J. B. Powell, an alumnus of the School of Journalism, and publisher of the Weekly Review of the Far East at Shanghai, China. Abe Sweet was given honorable mention in the contest.

Students in journalism at the University of Minnesota have put out a practice newspaper called the Minnesota Cub. Copies of the seven-column, six-page sheet were distributed free to all the students and on the campus and the members of the faculty. The material was compiled and edited by 80 students under the direction of R. R. Bartlow, head of the department.

Members of the News Writing class, numbering 86, at the University of Nebraska, were organized by Prof. M. M. Fogg into a correspondence staff that sent "stories" aggregating over 12,000 words to Nebraska weekly newspapers on the work of their home-town teams in the 13th annual state high-school basketball tournament, March 8-10.

A movement to re-establish the Minnesota Daily, official daily newspaper of the University of Minnesota, is now under way. The paper was recently suspended owing to lack of support and the small number of subscribers.

BATTEN

Two Moves

This week, the home office of George Batten Company ceases to be at 381 Fourth Avenue, New York. We move to 383 Madison Avenue, at the corner of 46th Street.

A LITTLE over thirteen years ago, the offices of George Batten Company were in the Metropolitan Annex at 24th Street and Fourth Avenue.

In the early spring of 1910 we moved to 381 Fourth Avenue, in which building we had leased an entire floor.

When we look back thirteen years, as some of us can easily do, it is remarkable how distinctly we recall certain details of that move. But at the time, these were considered minor details, not worth remembering. It is much harder to recall vividly the emotional side of that experience.

One quickly forgets the fear of things that did not happen. For instance, we remember that when our people and their furniture were set down in their new quarters, it was necessary to set the desks wide apart in order to avoid great expanses of unused space.

Only vaguely can memory bring back the trepidation we felt at taking so much space, though at that time it was the chief thing in our minds.

The fact of our moving to so much larger quarters re-shaped the character and destiny of many of the people who were with us at that time. It was the physical manifestation of a business determined to grow, rather than the actual expansion of a business that had grown.

A whole floor we took—nearly 10,000 square feet. The total number of our organization was then 92—men, women, boys and girls.

Well, we grew. The spread-apart desks were pushed closer together. The vacant spaces filled up.

Soon we were compelled to lease half of the floor above. A few years later we again overflowed, and shortly occupied the entire floor below. This week we are moving to an entirely new building.

The George Batten Company that will have its home offices in the new building at 383 Madison Avenue numbers 246 people. We will occupy something more than 30,000 square feet all told, a floor and a half with private stairway connecting.

The differences between the new lease we are taking and the one we took thirteen years ago are many, but the greatest difference lies in this: Then we were doubtful. Now we are sure. Then we wondered. Now we know.

The new address is 383 Madison Avenue. The telephone number is Vanderbilt 6300.

$47,500 to Boost State

A one-day campaign was conducted April 19 by the Minneapolis Publicity Bureau to raise $47,500 for use in 1923 to advertise Minneapolis and Minnesota. The purposes for which this money is to be expended includes a conservative newspaper display advertising campaign in territory contiguous to Minneapolis; to establish welcome bureaus in railway stations, to obtain necessary material for publicity in 1923, primarily photographs and data recognizing Minnesota's resources for the enjoyment of tourists and to co-operate with the Minneapolis Tourist Welcome Bureau, the Minneapolis Journal Travel and Resort Bureau and various trail associations.

$100,000 to Make Texas Known

The Texas Chamber of Commerce has appropriated $100,000 as a special advertising fund. Display ads will be placed in all the leading daily newspapers and other periodicals throughout the country. A special drive will be made to interest the textile mill owners of the East and North in the possibilities of Texas as a cotton mill center.

Ocean City to "Tell the U. S."

Mayor Joseph G. Champion of Ocean City, N. J., has announced that this New Jersey resort has appropriated $12,000 to be used in advertising in newspapers throughout the United States this summer.

Will Advertise Minnesota

A State-wide campaign to induce settlers to go to Minnesota has been organized by a group of Ortonville business men. The sum of $2,000 has been raised to be used in the advertising.

HARRISON ILLINOIS CHIEF

Press Association Favors Short Course in Journalism for Editors

John H. Harrison, editor of the Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News was elected president of the Illinois Press Association in the closing session of the annual meeting which was held at the University of Illinois, Urbana, May 10, 11 and 12. Other officers who were elected at the same time were A. G. Gravenhurst, first vice-president, Effingham Review; Irl H. Marshall, Mendota Sun-Bulletin, second vice-president; Miss Katherine McLain, LaSalle Post, third vice-president; H. L. Williamson, Illinois Publisher, Springfield, secretary; and E. H. Childres, Fairfield Press, treasurer.

A motion to establish a spring short course in journalism at the University of Illinois was adopted. Resolutions thanking the University and the cities of Champaign and Urbana for their hospitality, approving the school of journalism at the University and favoring the development of foreign advertising in daily newspapers were adopted. The informative advertising campaign already under way by the Illinois Central Railroad and other railway systems was mentioned as deserving of serious consideration and the officers were instructed to investigate it and take such action as they deem necessary.

Eastern College Editors Meet

Use More Italic

Beautifies Advertising Display

ITALIC is needed in almost every lay-out. It emphasizes by contrast and relieves monotony. You have not used it much because, in single types, the kerns break off. In machine composition all italic is distorted and badly fitted.

The beautiful, full-flowing Ludlow italic, in sizes up to 48 point, is close-fitting and non-breakable.

Hundreds of newspapers are now using the Ludlow system for display, getting new type on slugs for every advertisement and doing away with single types and distribution of dead forms.

There is a big swing to italic wherever the Ludlow comes into use. It makes your space more valuable.

The Ludlows have helped by giving us an unlimited supply of new type. The full kerned italics that can be secured by the Ludlow improve the appearance of the paper; foundry italics soon have the kerns broken under the dry mat process.—Topeka State Journal.

SPECIAL PAGE AND EDITION IDEAS

THE Marysville (Cal.) Democrat put over a "Call of the Open Road" page of small ads in its issue of May 4.

The Jackson (Miss.) Daily News had a four-page ad of the Kennington department store May 9. The first page of the section contained the pictures of 88 employes of the store.

The Newton Falls (O.) Herald on May 10 published an extra historical section of 12 pages, profusely illustrated.

The Ogdensburg (N. Y.) Advance and St. Lawrence Weekly Democrat blossomed May 10 into what is conceded to be the largest and most pretentious weekly newspaper ever published in Ogdensburg. It was an industrial, financial and commercial edition, commemorating the sixty-fifth anniversary of the Advance, and comprising a volume of 32 pages, divided into sections of eight pages each. Congratulations on the edition were received by George F. Darrow, owner and editor, from Governor Smith.

The Herrin (Ill.) News, weekly, published on May 3 an automobile edition with 1,928 inches of advertising, on the 23rd anniversary week of the paper's birth. The issue contained twenty-eight pages. E. J. Strattan is advertising manager and plant superintendent. Hal W. Trovillion is owner and manager.

A Central Eastern Indiana edition of 52 pages was issued by the Muncie (Ind.) Evening Press April 27. One, two and sometimes three pages of advertising and local feature stories were devoted to each of a dozen towns within the radius of the Press. The edition was profusely illustrated, and was also the occasion for several full-page Press promotion advertisements. A pictorial map of the district, showing the various manufacturing and agricultural points embraced, was an interesting page feature.

As a part of its 72-page paper April 29, the South Bend (Ind.) Tribune published a 24-page Own-Your-Home section. Left hand pages were features on home building and home-making. Right hand pages were nearly 100 per cent advertising.

The Rochester (Minn.) Daily Post and Record got out a special Odd Fellow edition of twenty-four pages on April 27 in honor of the sixty-second anniversary of the organization of the local lodge.

The Lincoln (Neb.) State Journal announces its better Homes exposition for May 14-15-16-17-18.

The Kentucky Jockey Club for the second season purchased eight pages of rotogravure advertising in the May 6 issue of the Courier-Journal.

The Windsor (Ont.) Border Cities Star on April 28 issued an Amalgamation Number of 58 pages, with a front page red ink-headlined editorial urging the cause of amalgamation of the border cities on the Canadian line. Views of the mayors of Ford City, Sandwich, Ojibway, Walkerville and Riverside are published, along with pro and con opinions of other leaders of public opinion.

The Good Roads Issue of the Sumter (S. C.) Daily Item, issued April 27, sold for five cents. It included a history of Sumter County, and was a creditable brief throughout for the need of road building.

The Saskatoon (Sask.) Phoenix issued a respectable Made-in-Canada Section May 2, with historical news matter and plenty of advertising support.

The Sunday (April 15) edition of the Honolulu Advertiser contained 52 pages of interesting news matter of the Territory, together with a well-balanced layout of advertising. A noticeable feature of the first page is that the "ears" are given over to dates of (left to right) incoming and outgoing mails.

The Richmond (Ind.) Item put out on April 18, a 28-page section filled with cuts of the homes to which the Item is distributed. It is a very graphic presentation of circulation statistics. The section was issued on the tenth anniversary of the present ownership. The circulation is now 12,399. In 1913 it was 4,818.

The South Omaha Sun celebrated its second birthday April 20 with a ten-page special edition. The first page was filled with greetings from friends of the paper.

The Ogden (Neb.) Reporter celebrated fifty years of existence April 19 with a 24-page "Anniversary and Community" edition. During those fifty years six editors have been at the wheel of the Reporter. E. A. Adams launched the ship in 1873. Then came Earl Billings, Edgar Williams and Carl Lund, W. D. Miller, A. V. Williams, and Carl Lund, present editor.

The Rome (Ga.) News issued a very attractive industrial development edition recently, featuring the commercial and industrial activities of Rome in articles and half-tone cuts.

In connection with a conference of the Rotary Clubs the Gulfport (Miss.) Daily Herald issued a special number wherein a welcome was extended to the visiting Rotarians and the history of Rotary, its activities, etc., were shown.

In an attempt to combat mail order inroads, Quebec merchants have launched a "Buy-At-Home" campaign. Members of the Quebec Retail Merchants Association have devoted special advertising in the newspapers to this idea. Special "Buy-At-Home" Editions were published by Le Soleil, the Telegraph and L'Evenment on April 14., and by the Chronicle and L'Action Catholique on April 21.

The Albert Lea (Minn.) Evening Tribune got out a 24-page "Made in Albert Lea Week" edition on the occasion of a special exhibition by merchants and manufacturers.

The Ypsilanti (Mich.) Daily Ypsilantian-Press got out a 32-page edition recently for a Dollar Day among the merchants. A record for local advertising was made with 4,017 inches, and at that it was necessary to cut down some advertisements and reject others altogether. Owing to illnesses, T. O. Huckle, business manager, personally solicited all this copy and wrote more than a third of it.

In connection with the annual convention of the American Foundry Equipment Supply Association at Cleveland during the week ended May 6, attended by industrial newspaper owners and writers from all over the country, the Penton Press issued a 12-page daily newspaper called "The Foundry." Penton's also utilized several pages of a special section in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, April 29, in exploiting the new $1,000,000 home of their publishing business. The Times and Commercial celebrated the foundrymen's meeting by issuing a special section April 30.

The Oregon Daily Statesman of Salem recently marked the close of its 72d year of publication by putting out an edition of 42 pages devoted to its campaign for a greater Salem. The Statesman was first printed as a weekly in 1851. It was established as a daily in 1861.

The Albion (Neb.) News issued a 24-page American Legion edition during the first week of April.

On the occasion of the opening of a new building of the Passaic National Bank & Trust Co., the Passaic (N. J.) Daily Herald issued a special edition on April 2 in which 10 extra pages were carried, devoted to the bank and advertising of firms interested in construction of the building or having quarters in it.

In connection with Home Furnishings Week, the St. Thomas (Ont.) Times-Journal on April 7 issued a special section of twelve pages devoted exclusively to advertising the goods handled by one firm, Baldwin Robinson, Limited.

The Gulfport and Biloxi Daily Herald recently issued a Mississippi Coast Rotary number containing 48 pages.

Tribune City

A Community of Better Homes

Within the city of New York there is another city of more than 130,000 homes populated by readers of the New York Tribune.

A newspaper with an intelligent, vigorous, healthy-minded method of presenting the news naturally appeals to the prosperous, wholesome, cultured element of the community. It is a matter of natural selection—like attracting like.

Every test proves conclusively that The Tribune has a strong influence with people who prefer the better things of life.

For Example:

For the past two years, The Tribune was the most quoted newspaper by the Literary Digest.

13,225 people in 1922 asked The Tribune's advice on investing their surplus funds. These inquiries concerned investments ranging from $100 to more than $100,000.

The senior students of Yale and Princeton universities voted The Tribune their favorite newspaper in 1922.

The Business Research Bureau of the New York University asked 2,000 business and professional people what New York newspapers they read and The Tribune stood a close second.

In a consensus of judgment of well-known advertising agencies as to the relative values of New York newspapers, The Tribune ranked first on the following counts:—(A) Strength in the home and with the family. (B) Subscribers on merit and as a newspaper, independent of special inducements. (C) Cleanliness of advertising columns. (D) Service to advertisers. (E) Appearance in typography, make-up, etc.

The Better the Neighborhood— The Bigger The Tribune's Circulation

You can reach some Tribune readers through other newspapers, but you can only reach all Tribune readers through the New York Tribune.

RED PUBLICITY SWAMPS LABOR PRESS

Radicals Under Identity-Hiding Names, Pour Reams of Prepared "News" Into Union Organs, Says A. F. L. Chief

WASHINGTON, May 17.—The trade union press of the United States, consisting of more than 300 weekly labor newspapers and official trade union monthly journals, is swamped with propaganda of every description, Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor recently informed the executive council of the Federation. Mr. Gompers' assertions were based upon a report made by the information and publicity service of the federation after an exhaustive survey of the propaganda and press agency efforts directed toward the labor press.

Needless to say, Mr. Gompers remarked, little of the propaganda is successful with the labor editors and strange to say only a small part of it comes from employers. According to the report, the bulk of the press agent and publicity material which finds its way to the labor press comes from "a certain class of psuedo-liberal periodical publications, communist, pro-Soviet and parlor pink organizations."

"The Federated Press," says the report, "might easily enough be classified as a propaganda organization, but, inasmuch as an official investigation of the Federated Press has been ordered by the American Federation of Labor, a detailed study of its work may be left for discussion when report is made following the investigation."

Discussing the kind of propaganda which pours upon the labor editors in a steady stream and the manner in which the press agents seek to put over their stuff the report says:

"The labor papers of the country receive about 25 installments of propaganda each per month. Most of it is distinctly pro-Soviet in character, from such organizations as the Friends of Soviet Russia; the Workers' Party, the American Civil Liberties Union; the National Labor Alliance for Trade Relations and Recognition of Russia; the so-called Trade Union Educational League and various so-called labor defense organizations.

"Practically all the pro-Soviet propaganda material reaches labor editors in the form of mimeographed and form of printed articles. Practically all of the propaganda organizations, seeking to reach the labor publications, have learned to imitate news style in preparation of their material and seek to give their propaganda the semblance of real news.

"Among a few publications material that is clearly propaganda and intended for no other purpose, finds generous use, but so far as the great majority of trade union newspapers and magazines is concerned, the enormous flood of propaganda material represents nothing but a profligate waste of money and effort. If there is any danger, it is that the persistence of the propagandists may ultimately achieve a larger measure of success."

The conclusions to be drawn from the investigation, the report says, are obvious.

"A considerable effort is being made to use the bonafide trade union publications for a propaganda that is hostile to the trade union movement and there is no indication that this propaganda will diminish in volume. It certainly will not diminish in volume as long as somebody can be found to pay the bills.

"Employer propaganda has not been developed to any considerable extent perhaps because employer propaganda is more readily distinguished and more summarily rejected by labor editors. Most subtle of all propaganda which seeks entry into the labor press is the propaganda of the so-called liberals who lean toward or sympathize with revolutionary movements. The Red propaganda would be almost entirely without chance of success any where if it was issued under names which properly described the organizations backing the propaganda."

How the propaganda organizations disguise their true identity is set forth in the report as follows:

"The International Press Correspondence, containing lengthy discussions of all international and labor questions from the Communist standpoint, being the official press service of the Communist Internationale, might under its camouflage name persuade labor editors of more or less 'advanced' view to use its material. The same is true of the press service issued by the so-called Workers' Party of America, the new name for one of the two co-operating communist parties. The Communist Labor Union International is represented in this country by the so-called Trade Union Educational League organized by W. Z. Foster. If it were called by its right name, 'the American Branch of the Communist Labor Union International,' it would receive scantier attention. Its publication, instead of being called the Communist Herald, is called the Labor Herald."

RHODES SCHOLARS HAVE CALL

Baltimore Suns Have Three Who Claim Oxford as Alma Mater

The Baltimore Sun and the Evening Sun have shown an affinity for Rhodes scholars from Maryland. The latest acquisition is Francis F. Beirne who has joined the force of editorial writers, having left the Baltimore News. He was elected from Virginia in 1911. He was on the saff of the Sun some years ago and was a first lieutenant of infantry in France during the war.

Felix Morley, who has been on the editorial staff of the Sun for some months, was elected a Rhodes scholar while serving in the ambulance service in France in 1916. He took up his residence at Oxford in 1919. He has been associated with the Philadelphia Public Ledger, with the United Press and with the Philadelphia North American.

Percy Maddox, who was a member of the local staff of the Evening Sun last summer, was elected last year and is now at Oxford.

Doll Show Makes a Hit

The Paducah (Ky.) Sun, of which Edwin J. Paxton is president, recently conducted a doll show which was announced for one day, but could just as well have been carried for a week, such a hit did it make. According to Mr. Paxton a doll show makes an appeal to every little girl in the country, who brings along father and mother. The Sun's show was handled by the women employes of the Sun, who featured it in news articles. Dolls were loaned or donated, spring flowers were used for color, and a number of features were introduced to help popularize the stunt. Mr. Paxton is now planning a marble tournament and will follow it with a strawberry show for growers and eaters.

ADVERTISING STABILIZES MARKETS, U. S. FINDS

Government Experts Find It a Powerful Factor for Preventing Gluts and Local Food Stuffs Shortages After Exhaustive Survey

The influence of advertising on agriculture and how advertising can be made a valuable economic force in stabilizing foodstuffs both to consumer and farmer is the purpose of an exhaustive survey now being made by experts of the Department of Agriculture.

What part advertising on a national or local scale can have on preventing market gluts of food products or obviating intermittent shortages the experts have not determined fully, but the preliminary studies have convinced them that advertising can be a distinct stabilizing influence and have proved so on various instances in addition to recognized advertising function of increasing the consumption and sale of commodities.

Heretofore most of the studies of advertising in its relation to farm products have been made in connection with its effect on the sale of specific goods and in a general way it has been thoroughly established that systematic advertising can "make" a farm product or increase its sale tremendously. What has been done with the grapefruit by the Florida Citrus Exchange, with oranges by the Citrus Growers' Federation of California are proof of that phase of the problem.

The federal experts also point out that approximately $7,500,000 has been spent in the past nine years in advertising "Sun-Maid" raisins. That the growers have found that "it pays to advertise" is shown by the fact that advertising expenditures of co-operative marketing organizations were increased from $120,803.74 in 1914 to $2,260,000 in 1922.

But the main question with which the Department of Agriculture is concerned is the economic significance of advertising on agriculture. Some people argue that there is no use in advertising farm products, that if one kind of agricultural product is advertised the people swing to it and away from something else. The experts have set out to find out the truth or fallacy of this statement. A particularly good opportunity was afforded to start the investigation in this respect by the milk situation in Boston. How the experts of the department studied the question in connection with milk in Boston, as told by Will P. Kennedy, of the Washington Star, is as follows:

"A great deal of advertising was done to increase the consumption of milk among Boston school children. Small bottles of milk were distributed in the schools, each supplied with a straw, because the children were more interested in drinking milk that way. The widespread advertising campaign was largely in the newspapers. The studies of the Department of Agriculture experts were of various groups of people to see what form of advertising influenced the people to drink more milk, what was the most effective form of selling talk, whether the appeal of health, cheapness, cleanliness, etc. Then the agents of the federal government made a study as to whether the increased consumption continued after the campaign was over.

"The result of the preliminary survey has not been published, because the experts have been using it to develop a method of checking up. But the survey did disclose that officials can get an accurate scientific check on the value of advertising. It also was proved that milk consumption increased permanently without cutting down the consumption of other food."

The department also is studying the effect of advertising in another way, as a means of getting people to eat the right things at the right time. For example, strawberries begin to move from the South in January and in February and March they are on the Northern market at prices only a little higher than they would be at the strawberry peak in May or June, but people shy at them because they are a luxury, whereas used for dessert they would be just about as cheap as pudding, pie or cake.

Briefly, what the department is striving to measure is: First, whether advertising shifts the demand or increases the total consumption; secondly, whether it can induce the people to swing from some food that is scarce to one that is plentiful; thirdly, whether advertising can shift consumption from one period to another in a particular year when the crop is most plentiful on the market, and, fourthly, whether advertising can be employed as a means of encouraging consumption of balanced rations, which will mean the maximum amount of all foods available.

PROHIBITION ADVERTISED

Anti-Saloon League Carries Out Campaign in Iowa

The Anti-Saloon League has carried out an advertising campaign in the four Des Moines papers and in several other leading Iowa dailies, pointing out the advantages of Prohibition. The fact that paid space is being used has attracted favorable attention. It is said by the Anti-Saloon League to be the first time that the organization has used display advertising to tell about the benefits of Prohibition.

Eight advertisements, in two column 19-inch space, were placed at weekly intervals for a two months' period. The campaign is now being taken up in Fort Smith, Ark., and is being consideerd in other States where the Anti-Saloon League feels there is a need for it. One ad portrays Prohibition as the "friend of the working man."

AD CAMPAIGN FOR TANNERS

$1,250,000 to Be Spent in National Publicity Drive

A nation-wide advertising campaign, to cost $1,250,000 in three years, was decided upon May 3 by the Tanners Council of America, meeting in New York. For the purpose of the campaign, the American Sole & Belting Leather Tanners has been formed, with Thomas R. Elcock in charge of offices at 17 Battery Place.

"Nothing takes the place of leather" will be blazoned on billboards from coast to coast, and will appear in display type in newspaper, magazine and theatre program advertisements. The idea is to show that the tanner is not responsible for the high price of shoes.

NEW STYLE IN BOND ADS

It Is Demanded by Changing Market Says Dealer

"A shifting in the market for bonds during the last few years is bringing about the necessity for a change in the methods of advertising such securities," A. E. Bryson of Halsey, Stuart & Co. Chicago security dealers, told the Financial Advertising Club of Cleveland.

"The surtax," he added, "is cutting down our market for bonds, and to create a new market it is necessary to go into the class drawing from $2,000 to $10,000 a year. This will necessitate adoption of a new kind of advertising, for the old style does not appeal to the new market."

PRESS CODE PLANNED BY COLLEGE WOMEN

Sophie Kerr Made Honorary Chairman of Committee of Theta Sigma Phi; Ruth Hale Is Elected a Member

A central council consisting of representatives of national organizations of journalists was called for in a resolution passed by Theta Sigma Phi, national honorary and professional fraternity for women in journalism, in convention at Norman, Okla.

A standing committee on professional standards was organized with instructions to initiate the organization of this central council, and to draw up a code of professional ethics, which will take into consideration all the relationships of the newspapers, particularly its relations to its readers, to its news sources, to its competitors, and to its advertisers.

This code is to deal not only with the ethical aspects of news gatherings and writing, but also the intellectual and the esthetic considerations essential to the best reporting and editing.

Sophie Kerr, novelist, former newspaper woman, and magazine editor, who is an honorary member of the fraternity, is honorary chairman of the committee. Ruby A. Black, instructor in journalism in the University of Wisconsin at Madison, is active chairman, and other members are Edith Abbott, Kansas State Agricultural College; Grace E. Ray, University of Oklahoma; and Marjorie Ruff, University of Wisconsin.

The convention provided for an extension of the membership of the fraternity into the women who are leaders in newspaper work in their cities or states.

The expansion of the Woman's National Journalistic Register, Chicago, which the fraternity founded in 1920 to investigate the opportunities for women in journalism, and to secure jobs for women on newspapers and magazines, and in advertising, was provided for by the convention. The fraternity will continue to pay for the surveys made in the investigations as to what women are actually doing in journalism, and the commissions will pay for the placements of women, as the bureau is a non-profit corporation.

The Matrix, a magazine which the fraternity publishes for women in journalism, was broadened into a magazine for all women in the profession, and will hereafter be issued six times a year instead of quarterly. It is hoped to publish it monthly later.

Ruth Hale, New York newspaper woman and president of the Lucy Stone League, was given honorary membership, the only woman ever to be elected by unanimous convention vote. She is sponsored by Syracuse University Chapter.

Sophie Kerr urged that the girls still in college consider the opportunities for women on the small city and town papers.

"Tolerance," she said, "is a much neglected virtue today, and you who will have a part in making the press of today and tomorrow must help eradicate the growing intolerance which mars our newspapers and our public life today."

Ruth Hale urged women to refuse to do the so-called "woman's feature," and to demand that they be considered on their own merits regardless of their sex when they ask for newspaper jobs.

"There is absolutely nothing that has anything to do with putting out a good newspaper which women cannot do, and are not doing, somewhere," she said. "Work is human, not male or female. Newspaper work is not like having a baby. The work does not have to be divided along lines of sex.

"You who are now in college will see the time when women will no longer be strange in newspaper offices, and positions will be given solely on the qualifications of the applicant, regardless of sex."

Officers elected were: Mary M. Kinnavey, Chicago, national president; Harriett E. Daily, Columbus, O., national vice-president; Muriel Fairbanks Steward, Minneapolis Journal, national secretary; Muriel Kelly, Appleton (Wis.) Post-Crescent, national treasurer; Grace Edgington, University of Oregon, national organizer; Ruby A. Black, University of Wisconsin, editor of the Matrix.

The next convention will be held on the Pacific Coast.

Other newspaper women on the program were: Vina Lindsay, Kansas City Journal; Nora Cole Skinner, Dallas News; Mrs. T. B. Ferguson, who owns and edits her own paper; Lena Osborne, Osborne Advertising Agency, Oklahoma City; Edith C. Johnson, Daily Oklahoman.

KANSAS GOLF TOURNEY

Editorial Association to Compete on Topeka Links May 28-29

Plans have been completed for the fifth annual Spring golf tournament of the Kansas Editorial Association at the Topeka Country Club May 28-29. Between 50 and 100 are expected to participate. Twelve silver loving cups are offered as prizes.

Officers of the association are H. L. Harris, Herington, president, and Griffith Bonner, Topeka, secretary-treasurer. Fred B. Cooper, of the Topeka Construction News, is the present champion.

Ad Golf Tournament Dates

The Metropolitan Advertising Golf Association tournament will be held as follows: May 24, Engineers' Club; June 12, Westchester Hills Club; June 17, Englewood Golf Club; September 13, Westchester-Biltmore Golf Club. The officers of the association are: President, Rodney E. Boone; vice-president, Charles G. Wright; secretary, H. B. Fenn; treasurer, R. P. Clayberger.

Curry Triumphs on Links

E. M. Curry was the winner of the first monthly tournament of the New York Newspaper Golf Club, with a net score of 67. Harry Solomons and Chandos Sweet were tied for second.

HARDING TO DRIVE FIRST BALL

Washington Press Tourney on New Rock Creek Links May 22

The Rock Creek Park golf course, latest addition to Washington's string of municipal links, will be formally opened Tuesday, May 22, when Warren G. Harding, editor of the Marion Star, drives the first ball in the annual spring tournament of the Washington Newspaper Golf Club of which the President is a participating member.

The tournament, in which nearly 100 Washington newspaper men will take part, will be more than golf play, for the ceremony of turning over the new links to the Washington playground system will be participated in by public officials representing the federal government and the District of Columbia. Edward T. Sanford, associate justice of the Supreme Court; Speaker Gillett, and Edgar T. Markham, Washington correspondent of the St. Paul Dispatch and president of the Newspaper Golf Club, will make up the President's foursome.

Washington's new golf course, laid out from a virgin section of the famous Rock Creek Park, promises with the improvements which will be added within the next year to be one of the sportiest in the country, particularly in the way of natural hazard of forest, stream and hill. The narrow fairways, cut through woods, place a premium on a straight ball and are expected to cause many a newspaper golfer to falter before the 18-hole medal play contest for the spring tournament cup presented by Edward Beale McLean of the Washington Post, is concluded.

Urges Page Church Ads

Co-operative newspaper advertising by churches, in which full page display advertisements, signed by all churches, shall supplant small ads now used, was advocated May 7 at a meeting of Baptist ministers in Chicago by W. F. McClure, president of the Chicago Advertising Council.

GOSS in the British Empire

WHY IS IT that great publishers in London, England, paid a higher price for Goss Presses than it would have cost them to buy London-built machines?

Why is it that the Goss business is growing by leaps and bounds in Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, Canada—all through the empire?

Fifteen out of the sixteen newspaper presses recently ordered by the great London dailies were GOSS Presses. Goss equipment in London includes:

GEORGIA HAS NEW PEST HUNT

Press Agent Added to Boll Weevil in Extermination Program

The Georgia Press Association has started a campaign to discourage the free space seeker. At the midwinter meeting of the Association in Savannah, the president was authorized by resolution to take such methods as he thought best to combat this situation. He named the following committee to take the problem in hand: Milton Fleetwood, Cartersville Tribune-News, chairman; Louie Morris, Hartwell Sun, and Charlie Brown, Cordele Dispatch. The committee has just made an appeal for co-operation of editors in letting those who "pay the freight" for this free space stuff know where most of it goes, in the following letter:

"CARTERSVILLE, Ga., May 9, 1923.

"This letter pertains to your 'meat and bread' —read it.

"You have heard so much about the boll weevil lately you possible know, by heart, just how to advise folks to get rid of this pest.

"Well, there's another pest we want you to join us in fighting, and that pest is none other than the Space-Grafter, the leech who is literally sucking thousands of dollars' worth of business into his own coffers, that should come through the legitimate channels of your own business office.

"Are you willing to do your part? Yes? Well, here's how you can stamp him out:

"Every time you get a piece of press-agent dope of any kind or description, lay it to one side until you get several pieces, and mail the lot to any one of the undersigned or mail it as it comes in, just as you find most convenient.

"We hope to get a lot of this BUNK, and send it direct to the advertiser, himself, showing him the press agent is not 'putting it over,' as he claims he is doing.

"You can readily see that if you were an advertiser, and were paying some space-grafter to 'get it over' in the news columns of Georgia papers, and had it returned to you in big doses at a time, you would soon wake up, stop the pay of the space-grafter, begin to realize the newspapers meant business, go to them with a business proposition and offer to pay them their rates for your propaganda.

"It's up to Georgia publishers—if you will only co-operate with your committee, we promise you to do our best; if you, and all other publishers do not see fit to co-operate, this effort will end in a fizzle, and bring joy and delight to the hearts of all space-grafters.

"For once, let's show 'em we mean business.

"Yours for business,

"MILTO FLEETWOOD, Cartersville.
"LOUIE MORRIS, Hartwell.
"CHARLIE BROWN, Cordele."

HOME FOR AGED WORKERS

Journalist Club Takes Option on Property in Colorado

To provide a home for men and women who have grown old in journalism and are incapacitated for further work is the chief aim of the American Journalist Club, recently formed in Denver, with an executive committee composed of former Governor Elias M. Ammons, Halsted L. Ritter and John Brisben Walker, formerly publisher of the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

The club has taken an option on property in the foothills near Morrison, and including large stone building with 43 bedrooms, a separate dining room, a kitchen capable of serving 200 guests, and separate servants' quarters of eight rooms. There is also a 100-foot outdoor swimming pool.

Two hundred of America's leading writers and publishers will be brought to inspect this mountain camp next July. The committee is working toward a goal of fifty paid-up memberships at $1,000 each. If these memberships are obtained, the home will be opened to guests this summer.

Each membership entitles the subscriber to send one guest to the home, where he or she will have a room free of charge and will be given meals at cost.

Mexican Newspaper Sanitarium

A sanitarium and hospital has just been inaugurated in Mexico City for the exclusive use of those engaged in any branch of the publishing industry. Subscriptions were received for 2,000 memberships placed through the country, and three of the four units are in operation. Membership extends all privileges of the hospital to members of families of the subscribers.

New Printers' Home Hospital

Plans for the erection of a new hospital building at the Union Printers' Home at Colorado Springs were to be approved at a meeting of the finance committee May 18. The present hospital building is to be moved to a new location adjoining the main building. The new structure will cost approximately $150,000.

MEMORIAL DAY PLEDGE

Campaign for Observance Launched by Boston Traveler

The Boston Traveler started, five weeks in advance, a campaign for the strengthening of Memorial Day observance.

The Traveler has been printing a coupon, to be filled out by readers and mailed to the Allegiance editor. It reads as follows:

"On May 30, Decoration (Memorial) Day, I shall at noon, wherever I may be, or at any time designated in a public gathering, repeat, either by myself or with others, this Oath of Allegiance:

" 'I pledge allegiance to my flag and to the Republic for which it stands; one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.'

"These 23 words I have already memorized."

Prints Architectural Survey

A great book, containing more than 600 pages, embodying all designs submitted in the Chicago Tribune's architectural competition, is being prepared by the newspaper's business survey department.

RECENT NEWSPAPER SALES

THE Penn Yan (N. Y.) Express, for more than 50 years edited by the late Reuben A. Scofield, has been sold to a stock company headed by O. J. Townsend and Charles W. Reagan, proprietors of the Print Craft Shop, Penn Yan. They will incorporate the company for $25,000, retaining $17,000 of the issue and placing the rest on the market. The Express will be removed to the Masonic building, Penn Yan.

The Kansas Printing Company, through its business manager, J. C. Mack, has bought the job printing plant of Bert Fanchier at Newton. This purchase will give the Newton Evening Republican a large job printing equipment.

J. L. Papes has bought the Caney (Kan.) Daily Chronicle from the Lindsay brothers. Papes formerly published the Wichita Daily Star.

W. L. Chambers, who established the Stockton (Kan.) Record 40 years ago, has sold the paper to Harry L. Covert, publisher of the Stockton Review, and is planning to retire from the newspaper business.

E. P. Barnhill, who recently sold a half interest in the Marshall (Mo.) Democrat-News and the Booneville Advertiser, has purchased the Lathrop (Mo.) Weekly Optimist from Mack Stanton.

The Montezuma (Kan.) Press was sold recently to Jay B. Baugh of Kinsley, Kansas.

The Milan (Kan.) Mirror has been sold to Hammond & Son, owners of the Caldwell (Kas.) Daily Messenger. Hammond & Son also have bought the Hunnewell (Kan.) Herald, and consolidated it with the Caldwell Daily messenger. The name of the Mirror will be changed to the Sumner Country Mirror, and it will be published as a weekly from Caldwell.

PROMISE IS A PROMISE

Here is one office where things are actually done. The Merchandising Department of this newspaper takes itself seriously. Its object is to build future business for both the advertiser and itself.

We Dig in Here and Know the Facts—Real Business Getting Facts

It frequently happens that we tell an advertiser not to come into Rochester at all—keep out—as it will never pay to enter this field.

The Times-Union can almost invariably tell with remarkable accuracy just how successful an advertised product will be in this city of wealth and continuous prosperity.

THIS SERVICE IS WITHOUT COST

It has taken years and real money to secure this information

BUT when the Times-Union makes a statement its truth cannot be questioned.

Your marketing problem may not be solved by this department but we will go a long ways toward finding out what resistance you have and what sales potentiality you have in Rochester.

THEY ARE ALL IN THE DAY'S NEWS

Bringing in the sheaves. That's what comes of sticking and digging with a definite purpose in view. Pulitzer prizes for the year announced this week by the School of Journalism of Columbia University go to the Memphis Commercial Appeal, of which C. P. J. Mooney (left) is editor, for the most distinguished public service rendered by any American newspaper during the year, for its courageous attitude in handling news of the Ku Klux Klan. William Allen White, second from the left, who signs W. A. in Emporia and is generally called Bill, won the prize for the best editorial with his message "To An Anxious Friend." Not strangely, but good enough, the prize for the novel which best presented the "wholesome atmosphere of American life and the highest standard of American manners and manhood," was won by the author of "One of Ours," Willa Sibert Cather (above), a former newspaper woman. She once reached the important position of telegraph editor of the Pittsburgh Leader. Alva Johnston (right), who is now a reporter on the New York Herald, won the prize for the best piece of reporting as a result of his stories in the New York Times on the convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Some party. W. W. Davies, New York correspondent of La Nacion of Buenos Aires, and the Santiago El Mercurio, is talking about the Press Congress of the World on his present tour of South America, and newspaper men are listening to him. In the group above, seated in the office of El Mercurio, we have: J. Miller, Detroit Daily News; M. Stiles, Associated Press; Mr. Davies; Dr. A. Bunge, Professor of Economics, Buenos Aires University. Standing: J. Hinman (light suit), Universal Service; and members of El Mercurio Staff.

Oldest of the corps. Mathew Tige, Universal Service (right), holds that honor in Washington. He knows everybody and everybody knows him. Here we have him interviewing Attorney General Daugherty.

Practicing what he preaches. Vivian B. Gray (center), rod and gun editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, proves it with the "catch" shown below. However, Mrs. V. B. G. also shines. She is shown at the right and claims the honor of having done the major part of the work in landing the 279 pounds of fish shown here.

The Hochi Shimbun was established in 1872 by the late Marquis Okuma, and continuously since that early date has lent all its influence to the support of its great founder's lofty ideals.

In the foreign news field the Hochi has built up a service which is unexcelled, and which has earned for it many readers who are intensely interested in persons and events abroad. This interest has been found to exert considerable influence on their taste in the purchase of imported commodities and undoubtedly has increased their consumption of products from abroad.

TRIBUNE LOOP OFFICE NOW PERMANENT

Downtown Service Bureau Has a Staff of Seven to Take Care of Chicago Public's Interests

The Chicago Tribune is attracting much attention through the development of its public service department. The bureau at 11 South Dearborn street is a direct outgrowth of the old "Loop editorial office," created as a connecting link between the Tribune readers and editors at the time the editorial rooms proper were taken out of the loop and moved to the plant at 431 North Michigan avenue. That was in November, 1921.

Parke Brown, now political editor of the Tribune, and at that time a recently returned foreign correspondent for the paper, established the first office occupying space in the rear of the business office at Madison and Dearborn streets. From the first crowds streamed into the rooms daily to take advantage of the free service.

Brown, taken over as a special writer on the editorial staff, was followed by John Channing Watts, who acted as "Loop city editor" for a year. Emma Jean Drymiller assisted. Later, Miss Drymiller took charge of the office. The income tax department then began to take care of record crowds. A beauty picture contest and Doris Blake horoscopes brought in large numbers.

Later the establishment of an employment bureau for ex-service men brought another group of thousands into the "Loop editorial" boundaries and finally came the greatest of all—the bonus bureau for ex-soldiers.

Over night the Loop office was practically wiped off the map. Partitions were torn down, counters installed, and a force of thirty persons put to work. "Miss Marriott Smith," the Tribune's "Friend of the Ex-Service Man," took up the bonus work. The first two weeks cared for 35,000 men in this department alone.

Joseph Medill Patterson, co-editor, then conceived the idea of establishing a recognized and organized service bureau.

The bureau was founded in an office where the city editor's representative shares quarters with the automobile editor's "downtown" representative, where the bonus bureau serves ex-service men, where resort, school and travel literature is furnished the public, where auto license blanks are distributed, where tickets are sold for Tribune boxing matches, and where an average of 3,000 persons are accommodated daily.

There is also an efficient information bureau. Baseball scores are posted in season.

James E. Cleary, promotion manager of the Tribune, has charge of the bureau. The personnel includes Emma Jean Drymiller, city editor's representative and bonus service; Nina E. Baker, touring bureau and automobile information; Hugh Donaldson, Charles Cleary, Walter Neilson, and John Boughman, all of the service bureau.

The Tribune recently opened a similar bureau at 1, Rue Scribe, Paris, France.

OKLAHOMA WANTS N. E. A.

Ingram Elected President—1924 Meeting in Sulphur Springs

Sulphur Springs was chosen as the 1924 meeting place of the Oklahoma Editorial Association at the annual meeting last week in Duncan. Ed Ingram, Kingfisher, was elected president and E. S. Bronson, El Reno, vice-president and secretary-treasurer.

Other officials were: E. A. Gaston, Okemah Ledger, second vice-president; Clyde E. Muchmore, Ponca City News, third vice-president; Mrs. Elmer V. Jessee, Mangum Star, fourth vice-president.

Resolutions passed included an appreciation of E. S. Bronson for his offer of $10,000 and an Indian collection to the State provided it would appropriate $75,000 for a journalism building at the University of Oklahoma, Norman. In view of the fact that the Governor vetoed the appropriation, the association pledged itself to work for the journalism building in the next legislature. The editors passed a resolution of appreciation to H. H. Herbert, director of the University of Oklahoma School of Journalism, for his work in training young men and women in newspaper work.

In another resolution, the association endorsed Country Newspapers, Inc., a co-operative association, to represent country newspapers in the national advertising field. Another resolution favored home printing of publications, pointing out that the publication of the Cotton Growers' Association is being printed outside of the state.

Following the business sessions Friday and Saturday the 200 editors and their wives were guests of Congressman-elect Elmer Thomas and Mrs. Thomas, of Medicine Park.

H. C. Hotaling, secretary of the National Editorial Association, urged the Oklahoma association to go in full force to New York this summer to secure the next year's N. E. A. Convention for Oklahoma.

Following this talk, fifty new N. E. A. memberships from Oklahoma editors were added to the list the State already had. If the convention comes to Oklahoma, a trip to Mexico probably would be taken.

E. A. Gaston, Okemah Ledger, challenged any editor in the State to present a better kept print shop in a town of 5,000 people.

The report of the legislative committee showed that no legislation unfavorable to the press was passed during the past session, despite the notorious licensing bill and stringent libel laws introduced.

N. E. A. SCHEDULE REVISED

July 15 at Lake Placid and July 18-19 at Saratoga

President John C. Brimblecom and Vice-president Wallace Odell of the National Editorial Association visited Lake Placid and Saratoga, N. Y., over the last week-end to arrange for the National Editorial Association convention and tour in New York State in July. At Lake Placid they met Dr. Melville Dewey, of the Lake Placid Club, who urged a change in plans so that the N. E. A. party could stay at Lake Placid over Sunday, July 15. This was agreed to. The Lake Placid country is the garden spot of the Adirondacks, and the club is one of its most attractive features.

As the result of the rearrangement, the tour schedule has been revised as follows:

July 8—Leave Chicago on special train.
July 9—Arrive in Buffalo. Visit Roycroft shops at East Aurora.
July 10—Visit Niagara Falls and leave by special steamer from Lewistown for Alexandria Bay.
July 11—First day's convention at Alexandria Bay.
July 12—Leave Alexandria Bay for Watertown.
July 13—Leave Watertown on special train for Malone.
July 14—Leave Malone for Lake Placid.
July 15—Lake Placid.
July 16—Leave Lake Placid for Ausable Chasm and then by special train to Saratoga.
July 17—Trip to Lake George.
July 18-19—Convention at Saratoga.
July 20—Leave Saratoga for Albany. Sail down Hudson to West Point, drive over new Storm King Highway to Newburgh, where late boat will be boarded for New York.
July 21—Guests Jersey City newspaper publishers and of U. S. Shipping board; dinner on the S. S. George Washington.
July 22, 23, 24, 25—Program being arranged by New York Committee, consisting of James Wright Brown, editor of Editor & Publisher, and John Clyde Oswald, editor of the American Printer. Details will be announced in Editor & Publisher as soon as completed.
July 26—Trip to Westchester County, ending with banquet at the Westchester Biltmore.

40 YEARS OF PULITZER OWNERSHIP

New York World Veterans Celebrate Event—One Hundred Eighty Men and Women in Service for More Than Quarter Century

The New York World celebrated forty years of publication under the Pulitzer family, May 10, when the Quarter Century Association, composed of 180 men and women associated with the newspaper twenty-five years or more, held its thirteenth annual dinner. The following officers were re-elected: Isaac D. White, president; Daniel J. Collins, first vice - president; Henry Jenkins, second vice-president; Frank McCabe, secretary, and William J. Shimer, treasurer. Thirty new members qualified for membership. They are:

I. D. White

John L. Heaton, William Mason, Albert E. Wood, William W. Gay and Charles Menzies, of the editorial department.

Edward C. Sanborn, George W. Miller, Timothy Gorman of the advertising department.

Leonce Levy, George R. Wagner, Harry W. Tupper, Isaac Marks, Patrick J. Quigley, John J. Lambert, Charles L. Harrington and John J. Farrell, of the composing room.

James J. Williams, stereotyper.

Samuel E. Speare, Peter Connors, Max Becker and James Cogan, of the press room.

Vincent Morello, William Willis, John Schwerein, George H. Price, Thomas L. Wallace and Barney D. Samuels, of the circulation department.

Miss Jane M. Fleury, of the auditor's staff.

Joseph P. Crynes and Ben Jacobs, of the publication office.

Charles L. Huson, of the Brooklyn office.

Norris A. Clowes, retired.

Ten active members of the association were present when Mr. Pulitzer took over the World forty years ago and thirty-eight served in old Pulitzer Building in 1889, when the new building was begun.

President White recalled the spirit put into the World by Joseph Pulitzer when he purchased it from Jay Gould and converted it "to the cause of the people rather than that of purse potentates," in the following address:

"Forty years ago today Joseph Pulitzer, having purchased the World from Jay Gould, assumed control of its columns. He was then thirty-six years old. The leading editorial on the following morning announced the new ownership, and made it plain that under an entirely new management everything was to be different. Mr. Pulitzer's idea of what the World ought to be was set forth in the editorial as follows:

" 'There is room in this great and growing city for a journal that is not only cheap but bright, not only bright but large, not only large but truly democratic—dedicated to the cause of the people rather than that of purse-potentates—devoted more to the news of the New than the Old World—that will expose all fraud and sham, fight all public evils and abuses—that will serve and battle for the people with earnest sincerity.

" 'In that cause and for that end solely the new World is hereby enlisted and committed to the attention of the intelligent public.'

"By referring to your membership lists you will see that there are ten men still active on the World who have been here during the entire forty year period. There are thirty-eight of us in the association who were in the old World building on Park Row in 1889, when the cornerstone of the new building was laid, and the success of Mr. Pulitzer's newspaper principles had been demonstrated.

"The new structure, as you will doubtless recall, was only half the size of the present building. Mr. Pulitzer was confined to a sick bed in Wiesbaden at the time, but he sent a cable message that was read at the dedication. I will not quote the message in full, but you will get the spirit of it from the following paragraph:

" 'God grant that the world may forever strive toward the highest ideals—be both a daily schoolhouse and a daily forum, both a daily teacher and a daily tribune, an instrument of justice, a terror to crime, an aid to education, an exponent of true Americanism.

" 'Let it ever be remembered that this edifice owes its existence to the public; that its architect is popular favor; that its corner stone is liberty and justice; that its every stone comes from the people and represents public approval for public services rendered.'

"The first time I ever heard Ralph Pulitzer speak publicly was when we dedicated the enlarged World building on May 10, 1908. There were a number of distinguished guests present in the Morning World editorial rooms on this occasion, which I always looked upon as one of the high spots in the World's history. The elder Pulitzer was kept away by illness and Ralph presided and spoke for him. One paragraph only I will quote to recall the spirit of the occasion to those of you who were present:

" 'As to the World's higher achievement, surely there can be no more eloquent tribute to that than the cordial gathering in its honor of such men as are here tonight.

" 'But gentlemen, there is one thing of which I am not too modest to boast—that the World has never achieved one jot of its success under false pretenses, but solely by making its performances square with its pledges. It has served the people always according to its lights, fighting for them when it believed them to be right, fighting against them when it believed them to be wrong. By both kinds of fighting it has earned their confidence and their respect. And it is their confidence alone which has made possible its twenty-five years of success.'

"Mr. Pulitzer died October 29, 1911, in his 65th year, on his yacht Liberty, lying in the harbor of Charleston. It is seldom that a man is accorded the high tribute that was paid him. Men prominent in affairs and the press of the world united in proclaiming him one of the greatest men of his generation; the creator of a new journalism which has made the newspaper a more potent factor than ever before in our civilization. In one of the codicils of his will appears the following:

" 'I particularly enjoin upon my sons and my descendants the duty of preserving, perfecting and perpetuating the World newspaper to the maintenance and publishing of which I have sacrificed my health and strength, in the same spirit in which I have striven to create and conduct it as a public institution, from motives higher than mere gain, it having been my desire that it should be at all times conducted in a spirit of independence and with a view to inculcating high standards and public spirit among the people and their official representatives, and it is my earnest wish that said newspaper shall hereafter be conducted upon the same principles.'

"For more than dozen years now the sons of Joseph Pulitzer have been living up to the wishes expressed so pathetically and so forcefully in his will. In the World of November 6, 1911, they announced editorially that the policy of the World during Joseph Pulitzer's life time would remain the policy of the World. And on this day and every day since then, this policy has been stated at the head of the editorial page in an extract from a cable message sent by Joseph Pulitzer to the editors of the World on his 60th birthday—

" 'An institution that should always fight for progress and reform, never tolerate injustice or corruption, always fight demagogues of all parties, never belong to any party, always oppose privileged classes and public plunderers, never lack sympathy with the poor, always remain devoted to the public welfare, never be satisfied with merely printing news, always be drastically independent, never be afraid to attack wrong, whether by predatory plutocracy or predatory poverty.' "

Howard Connolly, superintendent of second class mail at the City Hall Post Office; John L. Heaton, Frank McCabe and James McKernan were speakers.

Gov. Smith, Ralph Pulitzer, Joseph Pulitzer and F. D. White, general manager of the World, sent messages of congratulation.

Redwood City's New Daily Husky

The first issue of the Redwood City (Cal.) Tribune, which has just been granted the Associated Press service, appeared May 1 with a development number of 16 pages. George F. Morrell is publisher, Sam H. Winklebleck manager, and John G. Robinson editor. Redwood City, observes the Tribune, was one of two county seats in California having a population in excess of 2,300 which had no daily paper.

Baltimore

is eagerly looking forward to the day when our distinguished friends,—the British delegates to the A. A. C. of W. Convention at Atlantic City—will visit this city.

Justly proud of being the fastest growing seaport in the United States, Baltimore realizes what great advantages her facilities for international commerce offer, and is anxious to have our London friends realize it too.

Fifty-five overseas steamship services reaching one hundred foreign ports make Baltimore a strong commercial influence in the great markets of the world.

Eighteen coastwise steamship lines link Baltimore with Southern and Pacific ports, affording a concentration of rail and water transportation at the most strategic point on the Atlantic coast; in fact, recent census figures show that forty-three per cent of the manufactured products of the United States are located in states connected with Baltimore by rail routes that are shorter than to any other ports—a big item in estimating freight rates.

Closely allied with the mighty forward strides that Baltimore is making, are The News and The American, Baltimore's two pioneer papers in their respective fields. These papers, going into practically every buying home in Baltimore and close vicinity, are strongholds of power and influence in promoting the best interests of city and state.

In welcoming our distinguished London guests to America, The News and The American urge heartily—visit Baltimore! Not only will our welcome be cordial and sincere, but the vision which these "Men of Vision" will get of still stronger commercial relationships with America which Baltimore as the logical point of contact can provide, offers prospect of undreamed-of possibilities for the business future both of their country and of ours.

ON TO LONDON

GREAT BRITAIN compels attention. Never in the history of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World has such a determined effort been made to secure its meetings as is evidenced in the British, Irish and Ulster messages and advertising in this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Their invitation to the Associated Advertising Clubs, presented on behalf of London's Thirty Club at Milwaukee last year by Sir Charles Higham and given emphasis by his second visit, is backed by the advertisers of the United Kingdom with a force that should be irresistible.

These people do not merely buy and sell advertising space. They use it when they have something big to be done. So thoroughly do they believe in their cause, and in the efficacy of advertising as its missionary, that their expenditure in this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER alone runs well into five figures of American dollars.

It is a magnificent herald's trumpet blast for the delegation from England, the Irish Free State and Ulster that will take the central place in Atlantic City two weeks from now. It is also an unsurpassed display of British advertising technic in an American publication. It is the forerunner of that exchange of views and ideas that will be afforded with untold benefits to all participating both in Atlantic City and in London.

It is unnecessary to state that the visitors from the United Kingdom will be cordially and enthusiastically welcomed wherever they go on North American soil. They can rest assured of attentive and unprejudiced hearers at Atlantic City. Those hearers can also be assured that they will listen only to the soundest of arguments, based on the highest aims of humanity and business. The decision seems foregone, in view of the vote for London at Milwaukee last year and the repeated expressions of the advertising leaders of America since then.

Great Britain wants and needs the shoulder-to-shoulder contact that London and Atlantic City can give, but she doesn't need it one whit more than American advertising and business need contact with the nation whose trade has circled the globe for years, with honest goods, fair prices and consideration for the other fellow as its guiding principles. That creed is also America's. Its world-wide application will be forwarded by the closer understanding and removal of friction that the A. A. C. W. can accomplish by making its 1924 slogan "On to London."

Writing the word "World" into the title of the Associated Advertising Clubs should be made something more than a gesture.

NEBRASKA SHOWS THE WAY

THE State of Nebraska has at last taken a very definite step toward curbing landscape disfigurement along public highways by the erection of unsightly billboards.

Under the bill passed by the legislature, the Department of Public Works is made the guardian of the state's beauty spots. The bill not only provides for a permit fee, but also empowers the department to remove any sign it pleases without giving cause.

Billboards give all American towns a sameness when viewed from a railroad train that does not differ much from coast to coast, but that will no longer apply in Nebraska, for that state's new bill prohibits the painting or attaching of any advertising matter on bridges or within 300 feet of railroad or highway crossings.

Nebraska is setting a fine example for the rest of the country.

THE case of the City of Chicago, or Mayor Thompson, against the Chicago Tribune for libel estimated at $1,000,000 is officially closed by Corporation Counsel Busch who says that he will not seek a rehearing in the interest of a client that has discarded its First-Citizen-of-Yesterday. Even we have a hard time in trying to recall the instigator of the suit but the Tribune is still the Tribune and the only regret of newspaper men will naturally be that such a low value was placed on helpful and constructive criticism.

Day of Pentecost

Compiled by CHARLES W. MILLER,
Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald

AND when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under Heaven. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language. And they were all amazed and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue? But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel: And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of My Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams. Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation. Then they that gladly received His word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles. And all that believed were together, and had all things common: And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men as every man had need. And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart. Praising God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.—(Acts ii:1-8, 16, 17, 38-47.)

And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed his own; but they had all things common. And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all. Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold. And laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need. And Joses, who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas, (which is, being interpreted, The son of consolation), a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus, having land, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet. —(Acts iv:32-37.)

And be sure your sin will find you out.—(Nu. xxxii:23). What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food. And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled: notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. —(Jas. ii:14-17). Be not deceived: God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.—(Gal. vi:7.)

THE PULITZER AWARDS

THE most disappointing thing about the annual announcement of the Pulitzer Awards in journalism is the lack of controversy aroused. The newspaper business of this country will be in a much healthier condition professionally when each award becomes the subject of heated debate wherever newspaper men gather.

We do not mean to imply that any one of the awards made this year was not merited. Rather we are amazed that the service rendered should have been so completely in accord with the highest ideals of journalism.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER had already selected William Allen White's editorial as an outstanding expression of the rights of true journalism and reprinted it for the guidance of others. The Memphis Commercial Appeal, edited in the heart of the Klan country, has performed an unusual public service in its fearless campaign against religious partisanship and masked government. Alva Johnson is a reporter who did his work carefully and well.

But there is something missing in the way these awards have been received.

Are not the newspaper men of America proud of the things they are doing today that they do not defend them and acclaim them?

It certainly seems remarkable that a business that boasts of the millions that it pays to its cartoonists annually could not produce a single artist's conception during the year of 1922 that was worthy of the Pulitzer Award. Nevertheless this seems to be the truth, for no prize was announced in that class.

It is to be hoped that the American Society of Newspaper Editors will be able to stimulate wider interest in these annual awards.

What greater honor can any newspaper strive for than a gold medal for the greatest public service within a stated period?

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

NEWSPAPER owners and executives whose daily newspaper is their life-work can find much to think about in the news that the New York World Quarter Century Club last week held its annual dinner with 180 members of the organization at table.

All of them had been in the World's service for twenty-five years before admission to the circle. That is a long association with any organization. It is unusually long in the newspaper business, which often thinks of labor turnover as necessary as print paper. That thought is not found in the World's departments, as the existence of the Quarter Century Club evidences. The paper is known among editorial men as one which affords unusually pleasant, unhampered, and well rewarded employment. It has the reputation of treating its men in all departments honestly and with consideration for their needs and frailties. Its staff is carefully selected, not primarily to fill a desk that the day finds vacant but to make and keep strong the organization that knows what it stands for and believes in it. There is no magic in the formula.

The World and the hundreds of other newspapers who consider their staffs as families have found it in demanding and justly rewarding honest, honorable and competent workers, and keeping above reproach the standards of individual and organization conduct.

THE most important message contained in the address of B. G. Koether, director of sales service and advertising of the General Motors Corporation, before the Association of National Advertisers is that Capital with a capital "C" is sold on advertising. His paper as a whole was interesting and raises many questions of conduct on the part of advertising men that demand attention and solution but after all are they not the fundamental rules that it is necessary to follow in every calling that is dependent upon public response for success. Understanding is a natural necessity that can only come from contact but the big thing is honesty and applies as well between employe and employer as between employer and his public. Mr. Koether drove home facts in convincing manner and is certain to be listened to.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

TOM WALLACE, newly appointed chief of the Louisville Times' editorial staff, is a native Kentuckian. He began newspaper work on the Louisville Times, writing as a cub reporter, a feature headed "Little Dramas of the Police Court," which resulted, after six weeks, in his being called to a better position on the Louisville Dispatch, with which he remained until it suspended publication. He succeed Irvin S. Cobb as staff correspondent of the Louisville Post at the trials of the Goebel murder conspiracy cases at Frankfort and Georgetown, and as legislative correspondent. Later he was with the Post as financial editor, a member of the St. Louis Republic reportorial staff during the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, served as staff correspondent for the Louisville Herald during the Hargis-Cockerell feud in Breathitt County and murder trials growing out of the feud, before going to St. Louis, and was assistant city editor of the Louisville Herald after the feud trials.

TOM WALLACE

Returning from St. Louis to write editorials for the Times, Mr. Wallace went to Washington to serve the Times in the Press Gallery. Then he returned to the Courier-Journal to write editorials, remaining steadily at that job, and serving also as dramatic critic for about twelve years, along with editorial writing. He received one indefinite forlough to make a trip around the world writing on political and social conditions in the Oriental countries for an American syndicate and another when the Portuguese ousted King Manuel and overthrew the Braganza dynasty. On that trip he wrote articles from Spain and Portugal for a syndicate, and then visited France and England doing some work for the Courier-Journal.

Since that time Mr. Wallace has been engaged in editorial writing, making an occasional trip to Washington, or roving about Kentucky as a staff correspondent, to freshen up upon Kentucky problems.

Churches Lead the Way

Religious organizations of various sorts with predominant American membership, have for a generation held occasional conventions in England. There probably is a larger spirit of unity between the churches of England and those of America than there is between any other organizations in the two countries.

Several English papers are now using church advertising copy prepared by the Church Advertising Department of the A. A. C. of W. This Department will be represented at the London convention.

English papers which have not seen the proofs of 52 weekly ads to stimulate church advertising may obtain proofs on application to Herbert H. Smith, 518 Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

It Is, Indeed, A Pleasure—

JAY H. NEFF HALL

Home of the School of Journalism—a gift of one of its graduates, Ward A. Neff of Chicago

TO join in welcoming to the United States a delegation representing the advertising interests of Great Britain and to express appreciation of the desire for more intimate relationships as voiced in the invitation to be extended to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. Since its establishment in 1908 as the first school of its kind in the world, the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri has unceasingly sought to aid in furthering more accurate information, better understanding and friendlier intercourse among the nations—holding this to be one of the ideals of journalism. Its graduates are to be found in the practice of journalism throughout the United States and also in London, Berlin, Paris, Tokyo, Shanghai, Peking, Canton, Manila, and other centers in other lands.

Advertising is recognized at Missouri as a journalistic pursuit. In the department of advertising of the school attempt is made to offer a breadth of preparation that will assist in the advancement of students in the technical phases of advertising and also in its ethical expressions.

In "The Journalist's Creed" at Missouri it is written—and taught—"that no one should write as a journalist what he would not say as a gentleman; that advertising, news, and editorial columns should alike serve the best interests of readers; that a single standard of helpful truth and cleanness should prevail for all; that the supreme test of good journalism is the measure of its public service."

It would be a privilege to welcome personally at Missouri the members of the British delegation who may at any time visit this institution. Should that be impossible, there will be sent to any who request the School's printed announcements, including its special curriculum in advertising.

THEY do—or don't do—some things differently in Fleet Street. One of the things they don't do is extend the hand of greeting and tender the keys of the establishment to a visiting newspaper man from another land, as C. L. Sherman, editor of the Hartford (Conn.) Times, found out recently when he decided to watch the London Times flashing down the stretch for the first edition.

He also had experiences strange to an American newspaper man when he attempted to give the Daily Mail an exclusive piece of news—but he tells the story better himself. Here are the facts as he related them last Saturday in his own newspaper:

"I had done the usual rube stunts in London—been to the houses of Parliament, Westminster Abbey, the Tower, London Bridge, the Wallace Collection, Hampton Court, Windsor and had lunched at the Cheshire Cheese, and The Cock and Bottle, haunts not unknown to Dr. Johnson, Oliver Goldsmith, Thackeray and Dickens. It would be a pity, I thought, if I left London without seeing the London Times.

"In evening dress, as I had dined at the Cecil, therefore, about 9 o'clock in the evening I hailed a cabby and directed him to the Times. A veteran employee, evidently of the paper, directed me to a side room and I was provided with a sheet of paper containing a questionnaire which I was directed to fill out. The important questions to be answered were the following:

"Person to be seen—
"Name—
"Occupation—
"Residence—
"Purpose of Visit—
"Remarks—

"The only comment needed in regard to the answers I made to the questions is that I wished to see the editor in charge and stated the purpose of my visit as 'Personal.' The venerable employee disappeared with the paper and within a few minutes a young man returned bearing the paper in his hand and a blank expression on his face. The following conversation ensued:

"'Whom do you wish to see?'

"'Why, as I said, the editor in charge.'

"'But I am afraid, sir, that the editors are either at dinner or at the theater.'

"'Surely there must be some editor in charge at this time of night.'

"'Really, I can't say, sir. You see, this paper has your address as the United States of America and therefore, it was handed to me, as I am in the foreign department.'

"'That's very interesting. I am glad to learn that, but, as you will see, I am an editor of a paper in the United States. I am in London for a few days only and I wish to pay my respects to whomever is in charge.'

"'Well, what do you want?'

"'Why, I should be glad to greet some one here and if possible glance through the editorial department and the composing room.'

"'I fear that is impossible, sir, as it is getting late and everyone is busy. It would interfere with their work.'

"'It does not seem as though that would be necessary.'

"'Besides that, it is getting late and it is nearly press time.'

"'Near press time? Why it is only 9 o'clock.'

"'I know, sir, but we go to press on our first edition at 11 o'clock.'

"'Look here, young man (slightly exasperated), don't think for a moment that I am unduly impressed with the importance of the London Times. I have seen other newspapers and I have never been received anywhere except with [illegible]. I want you now to show my card to whoever is in charge.'

"The young man disappeared and in the course of five minutes returned with the announcement that Mr. ——— would see me. The awe and impressiveness with which the young man pronounced his superior's name convinced me that Mr. ——— was an important personage indeed and I followed him somewhat humbly. As I entered the fair-sized room I noticed a fireplace nearby the door and at the opposite end of the room a desk with a tall spare man standing beside it. He held my completed questionnaire in his hand.

"'Mr. Sherman?' he said, and as the young man withdrew, closing the door, I strode across the room and replied, 'Yes, sir.'

"And here follows as close a transcript of the dialogue that followed as is possible to reproduce:

"'What do you want, Mr. Sherman?'

"'As you will see from looking at the paper in your hands, sir, I am an editor of a newspaper in the United States. I am in London for a few days only, and did not wish to leave without seeing the London Times.'

"'Well, er, what can I do for you?' (This is such a mollified tone that I was misled as to the reception in store for me and committed the indiscretion, I regret to say, of removing my overcoat to my arm without invitation to do so, before replying.) To resume:

"'I should be glad to look through your editorial rooms and composing room if you don't object.'

"'H—mm. Why, I don't know about that. Possibly it might be arranged.'

"'I should be glad also, sir, of a few minutes' chat with you.'

"'I am so sorry. Really it is embarrassing. I am so extremely busy. It is so unfortunate that you came at this time.'

"The man really seemed to be in distress, and as he fingered the bunch of proofs in his hands I fancied I saw beads of perspiration start out on his forehead.

"'Really,' said he, 'I fear it is quite impossible. It is so late—and I have so much to do.'

"Disappointment, not unmingled with chagrin, filled me and dried up whatever sympathy the man's apparent agony and perspiration had engendered.

"'I can understand it fully,' said I. 'You have no more time than there is, have you?'

"'Really, you see, I haven't,' he replied.

"'And it is getting near press time, too, isn't it?' said I.

"'Yes, you see it is,' he answered.

"With that I put on my overcoat (I shall never forgive myself for removing it) and turned towards the door.

"'Really,' I said, 'I won't give you the trouble that my looking through the editorial departments and composing room would entail, and I will wish you a very good evening. I have only this to add—that if you come to the United States, I shall be very glad to show you the courtesy which one editor never should fail to extend to another.'

"There is some pertinacity in my make-up, however, and I determined on a visit to the Daily Mail, only a few blocks away.

"The same questionnaire having been disposed of I was conducted to a room up three or four flights and a young man entered, who greeted me pleasantly.

"'Ah! This will be different,' said I to myself. I had directed the questionnaire at the Daily Mail office to the 'night city editor' and staged the object of my visit as 'news.' This must be the night city editor and he has fallen for the bait that here may be a piece of news, I thought.

"Addressing the young man, I said, 'The night city editor?'

"'Oh, no,' he replied, 'there is no night city editor.'

"'But you have a city editor, I suppose.'

"'Yes, but he never comes to the office.'

"'What?'

"'Yes. You see, sir, he handles the news of the city, turns in his financial reports in the afternoon, and it is very seldom that we see him here at the office.'

"Here, indeed, my greenness was exposed—and for the enlightenment of the uninitiated I will say that the 'city' in London corresponds to our Wall Street. The city editor therefore, handles the news of the exchanges and the markets, and in the organization of the office no such terms are employed as city editor or night city editor, in the sense in which we use them.

"And as the young fellow had shown himself quite companionable, I felt like unbosoming myself to him a little, and I told him the experience I had had in the office of the Times. He smiled broadly and I thought I even detected a chuckle.

"'You see, sir,' he said, 'before Lord Northcliffe's death the newspapers exchanged their news, but now we are really quite competitive. What has happened in Hertford?'

"'Hertford!' said I. 'I don't come from Hertford, but Hartford, Conn., U. S. A., a city that was named after Hertford, to be sure, but is some distance away.'

"'Oh, I see,' he replied, 'my mistake.'

"I then went on to tell him that the piece of news I referred to was a combination of all the hotels in Egypt, formed by Charles A. Baehler, proprietor of Shepheard's Hotel in Cairo.

"'Have you given this to any other paper?'

"'No,' said I. 'And I don't care a rap whether you print it or not. It is of no interest to me, but I thought in my simplicity that it was a piece of news which you would like.'

"He inquired (bully for him) the particulars.

"I informed him that Mr. Baehler had entertained Stanley, the King of Russia, King Edward when he was Prince of Wales, all the statesmen of Europe, James Gordon Bennett, J. Pierpont Morgan and, in fact, all the notables of the world, as it is said that one can meet all the notables in the world by staying a month on the terrace at Shepheard's Hotel.

"'It might do for a five-line item, don't you think?' said I, and he admitted that he thought it would—but he would have to put it up to somebody-or-other.

"'I suppose Mr. Baehler can be reached in London?' he inquired, and I informed him that he was at the Carlton.

"'Oh, very good,' said he, and I took my departure.

"I felt that I had not accomplished much other than to get revenge on the London Times for an imagined slight, and the next morning with some satisfaction I told my room steward particularly to bring up a copy of the London Daily Mail with my coffee and rolls.

"Great expectations, but was there a line in it about the new hotel combine in Egypt? There was not."

Plan New Topeka Daily

Unless plans of Democratic leaders strike a snag, a second daily paper for that party will be in operation in Kansas within a few months. On May 1 a company of Democrats took over the Hutchinson Gazette. It is understood that the present Democratic News, a weekly, will be made into a daily.

Strongs Buy Minnesota Paper

The Virginia (Minn.) Daily Virginian has been purchased by R. D. Strong and others. Mr. Strong takes the post of editor and F. H. Strong becomes business manager.

Boost Lackawanna Trail

Newspapers in Binghamton and Scranton will co-operate in a publicity drive in the interest of the Lackawanna Trail.

Into the Home

Here are two facts worth considering, when an advertising campaign is being planned:

It is estimated that over 90% of all clothing, household and food products are purchased by women.

Over 90% of The Christian Science Monitor's circulation is delivered into the home, where such advertisements are read—slowly, carefully, comfortably—in the receptive leisure hours in which purchases are planned and decided upon.

Written essentially for the home, the Monitor is read—page by page—for its informative, clean news and dependable advertising. Thus it presents a unique and pre-eminent value both to the retail merchant, and to the manufacturer whose goods are offered to the public through avenues of retail distribution.

The Christian Science Monitor is read daily in thousands of homes throughout the United States, Canada and Great Britain, and it has subscribers in every city of importance throughout the civilized world.

IN THE AGENCY FIELD

EDWIN GOODRIDGE, of Corning, N. Y., has purchased the C. Freeman Advertising Company in that city. The business was formerly owned by Earl F. Heischer.

Frank J. Mooney, who recently formed an advertising agency in San Francisco and will take over the business of the Advertising Service Company, has been actively engaged in the advertising business in Detroit. He was formerly advertising manager of the Hupp Motor Car Company, and later was on the staff of Taylor, Critchfield, Craig Company, advertisers.

Cliff Knoble, of the staff of Brooke, Smith & French, Inc., Detroit, is the author of a new book, "Automobile Selling Sense," which is just off the press.

The Advertising Service Company, Ltd., and the H. K. McCann Company, Ltd., have joined forces in Canada. The business will be conducted under the name of the Advertising Service Company, Ltd. C. Truscott Solomon is president and will have charge of the Toronto office at 14 King street, East. H. R. Cockfield is secretary-treasurer and will look after the Montreal office at 70 McGill College avenue.

Fire of unknown origin gutted the building occupied by the United Advertising Corporation at Fort Worth, Texas.

The Ethridge Company, New York, announces the following additions to its art staff: Oscar Kellor, J. F. Murray, Louis C. Menna and Harold F. Sprague.

Walter H. Bamford, Jr., for several years in the production department of the Ericson Agency, has become a partner of Robert B. Hamilton, under the corporate name Hamilton & Bamford, A. A. and A. A., Inc., with offices at 522 Fifth avenue. Hamilton was formerly president and treasurer of the Robert Hamilton Corporation, 50 Union Square, from which he withdrew in 1921.

Miss Margaret Manning has joined the Hunt-Luce Advertising Company, Inc., Boston, as checking clerk.

C. S. Bauman has joined the Ralph Service Agency, Los Angeles, as account executive. He was formerly with the Chambers Agency, Inc., New Orleans, and more recently with the New Orleans Times-Picayune.

The name of the Spencer-Lay Company, New York, has been changed to the Lay Company, Inc.

Karl V. S. Howland has joined the W. S. Hill Company, of New York. He was formerly president of the Independent Corporation, publishers, New York. He also has been with the Outlook Company, New York, as secretary.

James A. Tedford has resigned as manager of the New York office of the Wylie B. Jones Agency to join Ruthrauff & Ryan, Inc., New York. He was formerly with Lyddon & Hanford.

George N. Wallace, until recently secretary of Redfield, Fisher & Wallace, Inc., is now with the Wallerstein-Sharton, Inc., also of New York.

W. B. MacKenny of Philadelphia has opened a general agency at 1830 Arch street under the name of W. B. MacKenny & Co. He formerly was treasurer of the S. H. Robinson Co., outdoor advertising.

Jabin Caldwell, for the past two years in the engineering department of the Northwestern Bell Telephone Company, has become secretary-treasurer of the Charles A. Hall Company, Omaha.

Wilbur D. (Dick) Nesbit of the William H. Rankin Company, Chicago, former newspaper man and noted writer of verse, will deliver the commencement address at Cedarville (O.) College in June. Nesbit is a native of Cedarville.

The American Association of Advertising Agencies has moved into new quarters in the New Park-Lexington Building, New York.

Oliver M. Byerly has organized an advertising business at Cleveland. He was formerly vice-president of the Lee E. Donnelley Company.

Francis DeWitt, Robert E. Carew and A. Phillips de Cernea have joined the staff of Sherman & Lebair, Inc., New York.

H. C. Briney has been appointed copy chief of the Chicago office of the Ferry-Hanly Company. He was for ten years with the George Batten Company.

Frank J. O'Keefe has returned to the McLain-Simpers Organization, Philadelphia.

C. E. Austin and Richard E. Tucker have joined the copy and service staff of the Hoops Advertising Company, Inc., Chicago.

Charles Daniel Frey, head of the agency in Chicago bearing his name and A. M. Briggs, vice-president of the Poster Advertising Company, New York, have been decorated by the French Government with the Medaille de la Reconnaissance Francaise. Both were national directors of the American Protective League during the war, working with the Department of Justice and the Division of Military Intelligence.

Lynn W. Ellis, vice-president of the H. K. McCann Co., Inc., who has been in charge of the Cleveland office of the company, has joined the New York office. Raymond Atwood succeeds him at Cleveland.

Maurice L. Hirsch has joined the Brooklyn branch of the Peck Advertising Agency, Inc., as copy chief. He was recently with the agency of Irwin Jordan Rose, New York.

W. N. Bayless, for the last three years chief of service for the Powers-House Company, Cleveland, has acquired an interest in the Schulte-Tiffany Company Cleveland. The name of the agency has been changed to the Tiffany-Bayless Company, with Mr. Bayless as treasurer.

Chicago Press Golf Scores

H. G. Weagant, with a net of 76, on May 7 won the Chicago Press Club golf meet at Edgewater and the wrist watch presented by Jesse Matteson, president of the club. Oscar Lundberg and Irving Vaughn of the Tribune, and A. T. Packard of the Post tied for second with 81. Weagant is of the Examiner staff. Don Chamberlain of the Tribune took the high net prize from William Sahud of the Post by 14 strokes at 207. Other low scores of the meet were: B. G. Wyrick, Associated Press, 85; H. F. Munzel, Examiner, 85; Carl M. Marston, News, 85; C. A. Segner, Post, 86; Frank W. Carson, Examiner, 87; Lewis Hunt, Post, 87; Park West, American, 87.

Newspaper Building Sold

A three-story stone building at 25 South Meridian street, Indianapolis, occupied by the Times, has been sold by W. D. Boyce, Chicago, former proprietor, to the Banner Furniture Company for approximately $200,000. The Scripps-Howard interests, which purchased the Times from Mr. Boyce some time ago, are negotiating for a site on the north side of Maryland street, between Capitol and Senate avenues, upon which they propose to erect a newspaper building. Their lease on the South Meridian street building expires within a year.

Pressmen Save Woman's Life

Modern surgical methods and the fine sacrificing spirit shown by pressmen account for the recovery of Mrs. Robert Dann, wife of a Peoria (Ill.) Star pressman. Suffering from pernicious anæmia of several years' duration, Mrs. Dann's life was saved by seven transfusion operations in less than two months—her husband furnishing the blood for the first two transfusions and five pressmen for one operation each. The men who volunteered for the ordeal were William F. Kircher, George Scott, Henry Max and Fred Straley of the Star, and Ralph Skinner of the Journal.

May I Send You Today:

One hundred pages of the most interesting and beautiful advertising of publishers—in one color, two colors and four colors—ever brought together in a general magazine! You will see how the London Times, New York Times, Chicago News, Philadelphia Public Ledger and scores of other publications present their announcements to the Public—the most convincing array of appeal and argument imaginable. And even the 130 pages of text is interesting, with an authoritative interview with Herbert Hoover, articles by Julius H. Barnes, Hilaire Belloc and others, showing the great part business and advertising plays in building up understanding in the world. It is the most impressive number of OUR WORLD I've put out and I want to send you a copy with my compliments.

HERBERT S. HOUSTON.

Editors and Advertising Men Have Been Keen About OUR WORLD From the Start, Because:

It gives each month a vivid, human narrative of what is going forward in every part of the world. It gives the background of current events, without bias or prejudice, but with informative comment and opinion. It makes you see clearly the conditions under which other people are living and the new ideas that are shaping the world. It is an absorbingly interesting magazine full of things that you not only ought to know but that you want to know. OUR WORLD is a magazine of fact, not of opinion. It tells you, not what to think, but what to think about. The world has changed tremendously in the past eight years. The map of Europe has been completely altered, old empires have vanished and new nations have taken their places. So, when we read foreign news we often fail to understand clearly what it is all about, because we do not know the conditions underlying the news. OUR WORLD supplies this need by giving a keenly interesting story of those conditions that form the background of daily news.

JOURNALISTA IS NAME OF PROPOSED CITY

Florida Seaport Project Sponsored by Newspaper Men and Backed by Orlando Capitalists

Journalista is to be the name of a new city in Florida sponsored by newspaper men.

It is to be a seaport at a site East of Cocoa and South of Cape Canaveral. It was announced from Orlando some months ago that a company was forming a railroad to penetrate the fruit belt of Florida, with a terminus at the deep water harbor formed by this cape. The site of the new city lies to the south of the proposed railroad terminus on the broad area of high land between the ocean beach and the Banana River. The new company starts out with a site nearly two miles long extending along the beach, to a depth of about half a mile inland.

A company of Orlando capitalists accompanied by a Tennessee newspaper man, are on the ground going over the details of the project. The party composes H. H. Dickson, president of the Dickson-Ives company, of Orlando, one of the leading department stores of the state; James L. Giles, a former mayor of Orlando and wealthy capitalist; R. B. Brossler, president of the Reporter-Star Publishing Company, publishers of Orlando's afternoon newspaper, who will be vice-president and general manager of the big beach enterprise, and Walter Johnson, owner of the Chattanooga News, and secretary of the Southern Newspapers Publishers' association.

R. B. Brossier conceived the idea of having a company of leading newspaper men get behind the project to the end of not only giving it publicity, but also to insure newspaper vision and creative power.

The new city site is reached by bridges and newly built roads leading across islands and rivers east of Cocoa. A bond issue of $500,000 was expended to make it possible to reach the beach on hard road.

The United States Press Syndicate is the latest addition to the feature syndicate field. The editorial productions of this outfit, located in Los Angeles, will consist, for some time at least, of feature articles on politics and economy written by experts and edited for publication by a staff of experienced editors. Robert Valentine New is president.

Criticism Costs Advertising

Because of an editorial criticism the Ogden Theatre, a motion picture house, has withdrawn its advertising from the Ogden (Utah) Standard-Examiner. A building belonging to the Peery estate that operates the theatre was destroyed by fire and the newspaper criticized the estate for not providing safeguards for the public and a passageway around the boarded-in store front of the fire-ruined building. The Peerys are contemplating erection of a business block on the site of the ruins that will include, and, according to their informal announcements, a newspaper plant.

URGES LAW TO ALLOW RETAIL PRICE FIXING

Federal Trade Commissioner Gaskill Thinks This Might Prevent Deterioration in Quality of Goods

Addressing American Trade Association executives, May 9, at a dinner at the Hotel Astor, New York, in connection with the United States Chamber of Commerce convention, Federal Trade Commissioner Nelson B. Gaskill advocated legislation to permit a manufacturer to fix a resale price for his product under certain conditions.

Court decisions so far have prevented such action. Mr. Gaskill said:

To the inability of a manufacturer to protect the price of his product may be attributed quite as much as to any other cause the tendency to deterioration of quality which is a distressing manifestation along many lines to day.

Deterioration of quality is a remedy alternative only to going out of business, which is forced upon the producer who cannot to any effective degree protect the selling price of his product. It is a truism that the purchaser will buy in the cheapest market, and even a small variation is sufficient to divert the current of trade.

There is danger in monopoly, there is injury in restraint of trade, and these practices are denied by the law because they close the door of opportunity to the individual, the maintenance of which as a free and open channel is essential not only to American institutions, but to the exact operation of the competitive system.

Where monopoly is sought in a relatively few instances, where combinations in restraint of trade occasionally make their appearance, while the alarm from these manifestations is justifiable and is not to be minimized, a constant danger lies in the practice now so prevalent of single line leaders sold below cost for the purpose of inducing other business, or establishments in which many lines are sold below cost with concealed profits in other sales which not only equalize the loss, but translate the whole practice into a profit balance.

The most effective remedy—resale price maintenance—must, in my opinion, be recovered not only for the sake of the manufacturer or the distributer, but for the sake of those who tomorrow and the day after tomorrow will seek to enter into business as individuals and find the door of opportunity closed against them unless this unbalanced method of selling is checked.

To accomplish this result legislation will be needed. This legislation should, in my opinion, distinguish clearly between a producer and his selected distributers and those other groups whose agreements may well be regarded as inimical to the policy stated in the Sherman law. It should require that the protected prices to be fixed by the producer should operate as a maximum as well as a minimum in order that the good faith of the practice should be manifest and its exercise removed from suspicion as contributing to undue exaction anywhere along the line of distribution.

And it would be well should such legislation include provision for the due publication of the protected prices and any changes therein in order that the purchasing public may be advised as to the producer's purpose and be guarded against a misrepresentation of which the producer may have no notice.

Editor Alleges Kidnaping

Frank Hoiles, editor of the Alliance (O.) Review, has brought suit against John B. Cox, former head of the J. B. Fox Transportation Company, on a charge of kidnaping. According to the indictment, Cox took Hoiles in a machine to a lonely spot and demanded, at the point of a gun, $10,000. The trial opened April 26 in Canton.

Virginia Editors Seek Office

Three Virginia editors are seeking re-election to the House of Delegates this year. They are: Wilbur C. Hall, Loudoun Times; Clarence J. Campbell, Amherst New Era; Charles R. Warren, Times-Gazette, Chatham. One, Thomas D. Bailie, Clarendon Chronicle, is running for the first time for a seat in that body. Peter Saunders, editor and publisher of the Franklin Chronicle, Rocky Mount, is a candidate for treasurer of Franklin County, and Paul Scarborough, editor or the Tidewater News, Franklin, is offering himself for treasurer of Southampton County.

Reporters in Error—Election Bet

When Howard Jackson was elected Mayor of Baltimore recently, reporters for the Hagerstown (Md.) Daily Mail, the Democratic sheet, joined reporters of the Morning Herald in a soft-shell crab supper after the Republican paper, giving news of the Democratic candidate's election, had been put to bed. Winners in a pre-election argument, C. Neill Baylor, J. Preston Usilton and R. B. White, treated the losers, Anthony H. Hankey, Richard O. Shafer and Harry Fridinger.

67 Years, No Issue Skipped

The Waverly (Ia.) Independent-Republican has just completed its 67th year. During that time not an issue has been missed. For the past 33 years the newspaper has been edited by J. F. Grawe, who is perhaps the oldest newspaper editor and publisher in Iowa. He is a veteran of the Civil War and knew Abraham Lincoln.

Newspaper Man Missing a Year

A nation-wide search is being made for Isaiah H. Shain of Roxbury, Mass., Boston newspaper man, who disappeared a year ago. He conducted an advertising and publicity business following his work on an afternoon paper. No motive for his disappearance has been found.

State Holds Up Papers' Bills

State Auditor G. E. Hackmann, of Missouri, did not act entirely without legal advice in declining to pay the claims of 115 Republican newspapers for publishing the proposed constitutional amendment submitted to voters last November. The claims total over $239,000.

Gives Old Files to State

Files of the Dubuque (Ia.) Times, for the years of 1857 to 1861 have been presented to the Iowa State Historical Department by John W. Taylor, of St. Paul, son of John W. Taylor, who was president of the Times Publishing Company.

Houston Post Trade Booklet

The Houston Post has just issued a fine imitation leather covered booklet portraying the advantages of Houston as a trade center. The final pages explain the news features and services of the post, and print the paper's circulation by counties and towns.

Fight Raise in Wire Rates

California newspaper publishers are resisting before the State Railroad Commission the application of the Western Union for an increase in State press rates. H. W. Norton represents the San Francisco, Oakland and Los Angeles publishers' associations.

Editor Gets Prison Sentence

John Mitchell, Jr., editor of the Planet, a negro weekly of Richmond, Va., was convicted April 30 of making a false entry on the books of the Mechanics Savings Bank of that city while president of the institution prior to its failure several months ago and was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary.

Weekly Revenue Bulletin

The Internal Revenue Bureau is to publish weekly in bulletin form its decisions on tax and Prohibition matters. In addition there will be a quarterly digest, the whole available to subscribers at $2 a year.

WHAT THE READERS SAY

Mr. Conklin Gives His Side of His Controversy with Mr. Kellogg

LONG BEACH, Cal., May 6, 1923.

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: My attention has been directed to an article in your publication of April 14, wherein it is said, under the heading, "Suit Against Kellogg Dropped," that I withdrew the suit against Kellegg, with apologies, and in which it appears that Kellogg denied the truth of the charges.

While I did give Kellogg a statement as published in your article, * * * I did not apologize to him and my reason for withdrawing the suit was that Mr. Kellogg came to me in Long Beach two days after I filed the suit and purchased by stock in the Anaheim Herald. I could then do nothing but withdraw the suit, for I was no longer a stockholder and in no way interested in the destinies of the Anaheim Herald.

Every allegation made in my complaint was true, and the fact that two days after my suit was filed, Kellogg purchased my stock can be construed by anyone as meaning that Kellogg did not want to let the suit go through court to its conclusion. I sold my stock in the Anaheim Herald to Kellogg at a most satisfactory price, and at a price he based when he sold some of the stock last summer.

I call your attention to this matter merely to set myself right with your readers and with my many newspaper friends over the country. I resent the inference in your article that I filed a suit against Kellogg without foundation. Every charge I made was true. If the charges were false, Kellogg would have no worry, for he could have his day in court to disprove them, if he could. My interests are now all in the Long Beach Telegram and whether Mr. Kellogg carries out his plans that were the basis for my suit, I do not care.

Will you favor me by giving my side of the suit dismissal as much publicity as you gave Mr. Kellogg's statement? Had I known my statement * * * was going to be published in your publication, this statement of mine would have been published at the same time.

S. S. CONKLIN,
Business Manager Long Beach Telegram.

"The Country Newspaper"

ITHACA, N. Y., May 12, 1923.

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Could you give me just a line in your valued publication to call attention to a slight slip in Professor Lee's most kind review of my little book, "The Country Newspaper"? The second point I tried to make in the chapter on the problems and difficulties of the country weekly is that "the small communities as they become less isolated and more sophisticated are more difficult to satisfy in reading matter." Prof. Lee's interpretation, I realize, represents the usual point of view.

He stated it this way: "The readers, being isolated, often know the news and therefore are more difficult to satisfy." This would not be worth calling attention to were it not for the fact that too seldom in considering the country weekly do we stop to realize that no longer is the home paper the only paper read by most small town and country people, with the result that they are becoming more critical; often the comparison they make between the small paper—which quite satisfied them a decade ago—and the city paper is not favorable to the local product. I feel, therefore, that this point is a reasonably important one, and I use it to sustain my position that the country weekly of the future must be better than it has been in the past.

M. V. ATWOOD.

Ethics Depend on Public

CHICAGO, May 9, 1923.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER: A. H. Vandenberg, of the Grand Rapids Herald, informs me that you intend to publish in full the Amended Code of Ethics of newspaper editors. I would like to get a copy of this code of ethics as soon as possible and help give the same publicity among those who are not editors.

I am enclosing you herein a copy of some of the Codes of Ethics adopted by the lawyers since 1908. We lawyers have found that it is impossible to establish ethics in any line of business unless the public help establish these ethics. In other words, if the public demand crooked lawyers and leaderless editors they will have them.

Yours very truly,
JOE BEATTY BURTT.

Save the Life of a Child

NEW YORK, May 4, 1923.

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Near East Relief, the organization chartered by Congress for the purpose of aiding the suffers from war and famine in the Near East, counts among those interested in working for it not only the editors and publishers of countless local papers and magazines throughout the country but also journalists and authors of national repute.

Twenty-six writers of books are on the board of trustees. So is a book publisher, George A. Plimpton, a member of the firm of Ginn's. So is Robert A. Cuddihy, publisher of the Literary Digest, who has thrown his own weight and that of his publication into the task of raising a large sum at a time of dire emergency. So is Vance McCormick, nationally known as a newspaper publisher as well as for his political activities.

So are John Finley, former Commissioner of Education of New York State and now associate editor of the New York Times and Josephus Daniels, ex-Secretary of the Navy and editor of the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer.

On the editorial committee are Dr. Talcott Williams, emeritus professor of journalism in the Pulitzer School of Journalism; Hamilton Holt, former editor and owner of the Independent and now one of its editorial advisers, and Albert Shaw, founder and editor of the American Review of Reviews.

All these men are interested in the work of Near East Relief for the children orphaned by war and massacre, not only because they are students of foreign affairs and not only for humane reasons. There is an economic side to the orphan problem, an aspect that appeals to the hard-headed business man. For these children are not being pauperized; they are being trained for self-suport. And, because of the terrific loss of man-power among the Greeks and Armenians, these American-trained boys and girls will be the economic leaders of their people in the not far-distant future.

The villages of Russia Armenia and the Caucasus and Syria are eager to get the sixteen-year-old carpenters and masons and smiths and weavers and tailors and shoemakers when they yield their places in the orphanages to younger children and step out into the world on their own. And the girls, trained to domestic work and to finger crafts—embroidery and lace-making and dressmaking—will be fitted to tak care of themselves or to manage skillfully the households of their husbands.

It is America's privilege to be the backer in this great enterprise of rehabilitation. Editors and publishers and writers are helping to put it over.

Five dollars a month, $60 a year is the cost of a child.

MABELL S. C. SMITH,
Near East Relief, 151 5th Avenue, New York.

A Word of Appreciation

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., May 11, 1923.

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Returning from the April conventions in New York and Washington I feel that you are entitled to a word of very sincere and appreciative praise for the manner in which you covered all of these events.

I have never seen a finer or a more complete piece of work in trade journalism in any field. You are making a very definite and invaluable contribution to contemporary journalism.

A. H. VANDENBERG,
Editor and publisher, Grand Rapids Herald.

Daily Changes to Weekly

The Benton County Courier, printed at Corvallis (Ore.), has been bought by H. E. Brown of Silverton, Ore., who will change it from a daily to a weekly. Corvallis has another daily, the Gazette-Times, besides a student daily, the Oregon Agricultural College Barometer.

Welland Daily Gives Up

After six months publication, the Welland (Ont.) Daily News has suspended. Competition of Buffalo and Toronto dailies and high cost of newsprint are given by Harry B. Sidey, publisher, as reasons for suspension. Welland now has no daily newspaper.

Kansas Papers Consolidated

R. R. Painter, editor of the Rolla (Kan.) Progress has taken over the Elkhart (Kan.) Enterprise and has consolidated the Progress and Enterprise, which will be issued at Elkhart weekly, under the name of the Morton County Progress.

Overland Monthly Merged

The Overland Monthly, published in San Francisco and founded by Bret Harte in 1868, has been consolidated with the Out West Magazine, established by Charles Lummis.

Michigan Code Planned

The University Press Club of Michigan is considering adoption of a code of ethics for Michigan. A committee has been named to prepare data, and editors of Michigan dailies are being asked to aid. It is expected the first draft will be ready within a few weeks.

State Gets Bust of Writer

The bust of Alfred Lambourne of Salt Lake City, writer and artist, has been presented to the State of Utah. It is the work of Mahonri Young. The presentation speech was made by Industrial Commissioner Nephi L. Morris.

†Government Statement, April 1, 1923.

Here, in this group of states, you will find that 7,400,909 people live, approximately 7½% of the total population of the United States.

These people have forty per cent of the savings of the entire country, produce eleven and a half per cent of the country's manufactured products, leading in many lines. Nearly forty per cent of the families in these New England Sates own their own home.

New England is a twelve months market of gigantic magnitude twelve months in the year. The compact population—centered for the most part in large cities — is busy the year around.

These New England Daily Newspapers extend a cordial welcome to all British advertising men and express the wish that they will find time to visit this cornerstone of the United States.

These papers are the leaders in circulation, in advertising, in influence and completely cover New England.

DOLLAR PULLERS

Advertising and circulation managers are always on the lookout for new ideas that will increase advertising receipts and win new circulation. Your idea for increasing advertising or circulation may not appeal to your manager, but it may be just the thing that some other manager wants. EDITOR & PUBLISHER will pay $1 for each idea printed under this head. The fact that the idea is now being used in your city does not bar it from the department. Adress your communication to the DOLLAR PULLER EDITOR. When they appear clip them and mail them in and receive payment. Unavailable ideas will not be returned.

THE abstract proposition set forth in all lists of rules covering successful salesmanship that a prospective buyer's hobby intelligently worked upon will result in orders is old stuff, but concrete examples of the working out of the proposition may be interesting. The leading undertaker of a certain Western city was a prolific writer of what is termed poetry. The fact was open to the world. His effusions, rather good, too, many of them, appeared frequently in the local papers. Of advertising space in these papers he bought only one inch single column. A certain advertising salesman, having observed these things, wrote a half column of "poetry" bearing upon the good points of the undertaking shop and took it around to the undertaker, suggesting that he use it as an ad. It was good bait. The undertaker grabbed at it. "But," said he, "it is very bad poetry (which it was), and I shall have to fix up something of my own for the purpose." The contract was increased without difficulty from an inch to ten inches then and there.—D. H. Talmadge, 193 North Commercial street, Salem, Ore.

The Spring and Summer seasons of safety campaigns will soon be here. Why not have the business and editorial departments co-operate in the presentation of a Safe Drivers' Page, daily or weekly? The editorial department could contribute a series of brief laymen's lessons on the factors in motor car maintenance and operation which take subjects such as brakes, lubrication, headlights, and the use of signal devices. It should not be difficult, then, for the advertising department to stir up a lot of new business among the accessory and auto supply people. Incidentally, the paper which conducts a high grade page of this sort will gain the support and appreciation of the business men and organizations interested in accident prevention.—Louis Resnick, 1421 Tribune Bldg., New York City.

The one thing which goes further toward making a city better and better than any one factor is building construction. Most cities have engaged in a great lot of building this season, and are looking forward to an even bigger year in 1924, so it would be appropriate for a newspaper to get up a two-page spread on which would appear stories telling about the city's advance in building construction this year and giving an outline of what may be expected next year and to have on these pages the ads of local builders, real estate men, plumbers and heaters, etc., in which each advertiser would cite some of the specific things he has done toward making the city bigger and better. Such a spread would touch a popular chord and could be put over by the paper quite easily.—Frank H. Williams, 1920 Spy Run avenue, Fort Wayne, Ind.

"The BLANK Apartments Are Ready For Immediate Occupancy"—so reads a heading over a two-page spread in an Indianapolis paper recently. An excellent write-up on the new building, its location, architectural beauty, convenience, etc., followed by ads of about thirty concerns interested in its construction, equipment and furnishings. Have this idea ready the next time a new building opening—apartment, theatre, hotel, office building, garage, etc., is announced in your city.—George C. Marcley, Republican-Journal, Ogdensburg, N. Y.

The A. H. Belo Company of Dallas has developed a unique method of building goodwill for its Semi-Weekly Farm News. In conjunction with the home economics department of Texas A. & M. College, the newspaper is offering eight prizes in an "improved kitchen contest." One set of prizes will be given for the kitchen making the greatest improvement in four months. The other prizes will be given for the most convenient kitchens. The county home demonstration agents will conduct the contests in the various counties, under the supervision of the A. & M. authorities. A State committee will make the final awards. The Farm News will carry suggestions for the contestants and all the publicity for the contest. The prizes aggregate $95.—Paul J. Thompson, University of Texas, Austin, Tex.

A big national advertiser recently wrote us as follows: "In your letter you neglected to give us the type size of your page. We want to give you a half-page advertisement, but are unable to prepare it until we know the measurement of your journal. Publishers are losing business that mounts to seven figures every year, simply because they do not give industrial advertisers this information." The letter which the advertiser referred to was a solicitation of space for a special edition, and through negligence we did not mention our page size. Judging from his reply, we were not the first to make such an omission. This tip should be especially valuable to publishers and advertising managers of industrial and trade journals in which field there is such a variation of page sizes, and even to the publishers of country weeklies and small dailies.—Ruel McDaniel, P. O. Box No. 683, New Orleans.

A number of dailies are running regular news stories about the various oddities and bargains to be found in the classified section of the paper each day. Why not go this idea a point more and extend the story to the display advertisements, or make an entirely different daily feature of the news to be found in the display advertisements? The feature could be headed something like this: "We See By Today's Advertisement That——." Then under this heading quote the most important announcements, from a news standpoint, that are to be seen in the day's advertising copy. This feature will prove to be not only a passably good news idea, but it will be a goodwill builder for the advertising department among the paper's advertisers. Furthermore, it should promote friendly competition among local advertisers for the distinction of being most quoted in the news feature, and this competition will lead to better and harder pulling copy.—Ruel McDaniel, P. O. Box No. 683, New Orleans.

"Making the Punishment Fit the Crime" has been revamped into "Making the Container Suit the Candy." Some time ago one store of a large chain found itself overstocked with a black candy by accidentally ordering 1,000 pounds instead of 100 pounds. The manager filled toy coal buckets which he carried in stock, and made a full window display, selling the entire amount within a week, as well as a large number of coal hods. The local papers carried several large ads announcing this novel idea. Due to the fact that the recent fuel shortage has given the black diamond a prominent place in the mind of the average citizen, I think a live-wire ad man could draft suitable copy and sell it to one of the local confectioners (try a non-advertiser first) with little effort. Try it during a dull season if possible.—G. C. Marcley, Republican-Journal, Ogdensburg, N. Y.

KANSAS CITY JOURNAL MOVES

Installed in Largest Plant West of Mississippi, Is Claim

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 14.—The Kansas City Journal has moved to its new home at Twentieth and Magee streets, after being located at Eighth and Magee streets more than 20 years, and today's issue was printed from the new building.

Walter S. Dickey, owner and publisher of the Journal and Post, purchased a big building formerly occupied as an automobile school and remodeled it into what is said to be the largest newspaper plant west of the Mississippi. New machinery has been installed, and the press equipment is said to be the best in this section. The formal dedication of the new plant will be June 3.

STEEL WORK COMPLETED

N. Y. Times Putting Presses Into New Addition to Annex

A new American flag atop the tower of the New York Times Annex May 14 signified the completion of the steel work of the addition which will double the size of the Annex. The final rivet in the steel skeleton was hammered into place 342 feet above West 43d street, and almost at the same minute the first piece of machinery for the new plant went into place in the basement. It was a section of apparatus for handling reels in the pressroom, where additional presses will be installed about July 1. Press operations will start in about six weeks.

Chilton Company Moves

The Chilton Company announces removal from Market and 49th streets, Philadelphia, to its new plant at Chestnut and 56th streets. The firm publishes the Automobile Trade Journal, Commercial Car Journal, Chilton Automobile Directory, Chilton Tractor Journal, Chilton Tractor Index, and the Chilton Hotel Supply Index.

OTHER PLANT IMPROVEMENTS

The Burlington (Iowa) Gazette, Iowa's oldest newspaper, is now being issued from its new $100,000 home on Washington street, between Third and Fourth streets. This new building is replacing the structure erected in 1895.

The Boston Advertiser has installed several new color presses and a new tabloid press, all made by R. Hoe & Co. The Advertiser has moved its former offices at 309 Washington and 82 Boylston street to 100 Summer street.

The Burlington Gazette, Iowa's oldest newspaper, is now in its new home, between Third and Fourth on Washington street. The new building is the first in the city to be erected especially for a newspaper plant.

Lumber, a weekly business publication which moved to Chicago some months ago, has returned to St. Louis where it was first established. A. R. Kriechbaum is president, and George F. Haines, who purchased the interest of W. C. Howe, is vice-president.

Town and Country, published by the Stuyvesant Company, will move soon to new quarters at 383 Madison avenue, New York City.

William Randolph Hearst has obtained a thirty-day option on the Russ Building, situated in the heart of the San Francisco financial district. It is said the present structure is to be razed and a twelve-story office building erected.

The Herald Publishing Company, of Denison, Texas, has voted to increase the capital stock from $10,000 to $45,000. The additional capital will be used in the purchase of new equipment.

The Columbus Lithograph Company, with Edward J. Goodman as president, has increased its capital from $60,000 to $200,000 and announces a big expansion program. The installation of modern presses and machinery in a new plant is planned. James S. Van Nostrand is vice-president and general manager and Julius Feibel is treasurer, Edwin Schoenfield being secretary, while other well known Columbus business men are directors.

The Sumner (Wash.) News-Index has installed stereotyping equipment to handle advertising in mat form.

The proofroom of the Boston Transcript has been moved from its former location in the building on Washington street to larger quarters in the building at 17 Milk street.

The Vancouver Sun has increased its size to 8 columns, 12 ems, 22 inches deep.

The Montavilla (Ore.) Times, Portland surburban newspaper, has moved into new quarters.

New Press in Port Chester

The Port Chester (N. Y.) Daily Item started operation of its newly installed sixteen-page Duplex press on May 14.

Brentano Buys Chicago Shop

A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, which started as a retail bookstore and branched out into the wholesale book business, has sold its retail business to Brentano's, of New York. The store will be linked with the Brentano establishments in New York, Washington, London and Paris.

Fire in Ohio Plant

The plant of the Alger (O.) News suffered $3,500 damage by fire April 26.

HUNCHES

Managing editors and city editors are always on the lookout for news and feature ideas that can be used locally. Editor & Publisher will pay $1 for each hunch published under this head. The fact that the hunch is now being worked successfully in your city does not bar it from this department. Address your contributions to the Hunch Editor. When they appear, clip them and mail them in and receive payment. Unavailable hunches will not be returned.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER receives a great many requests for the names and addresses of contributors to the Hunch and Dollar Puller departments from newspapers anxious to get in immediate touch with them. Under the system of using only initials of contributors it has in some cases taken us six weeks or more to connect the wires. For this reason better service will be rendered in the future if the following form is followed in the case of each contribution to the departments:—Name of contributor, name of newspaper, employer or home address, name of city, abbreviation of State name.

THE kind things that are said every day by someone about someone or something are goodwill builders for your paper. A department of terse interviews in which these can be carried along with comments by local people on any interesting subject, is a great feature.—R. M. F.

Has the army slang survived in your city? American Legion men can tell you. Interview wives of Legion men and see if they know who won the war. Do any of the local ex-service men say, "Well, let's shove off," when with friend wife they visit the preacher?—E. M. H., Jr.

A photographer here has been using space to advertise "one photo free to everyone whose birthday occurs between January 15 and 30. No obligation to buy more." He's filling up a dead season as of course they all do buy more, and he's getting some new business.—H. J. W.

A brief investigation revealed the fact that within a few miles of Bakersfield were families containing from ten to twenty children. In these days when the high cost of living sternly restricts the size of families, it is always interesting to know about the fearless few who have been able to feed and clothe more than five children.—M. F. W.

Some of the best recipes in existence never get into print. Therein lies an opportunity for the country editor to boost his paper, and at the same time to do a real service. A little inquiry will bring to light enough of these local formulas to feature one a week for a long time. The idea might be carried still further by later collecting them and reprinting them in a cook-book bearing the name of the paper.—T. A. H.

Try a local story on surgical methods of ten or twenty or even thirty years ago, gathering the data from men or women who underwent operations at that time. In this day, when so many people's life calendar dates backward or forward from "my operation," the story should attract many readers.—D. N. T.

Are there more men or women in your county poor house? One newspaper found the women outnumbered the men two to one. Some interesting facts regarding the age at which inmates are admitted to almshouses may also be obtained.—E. V. R.

In the records of our registrar of vital statistics we found that parents are naming their children after Bible characters instead of moving picture actors and stage stars. The names of John and Mary lead the list. Your registrar has a world of information which you may have for the asking.—G. H.

The issuance of a new city directory is a good occasion for a story on queer names. Look for names of famous persons, well known characters in the comics, names which are pronounced the same as words used in everyday conversation, etc. Properly worked out it makes a dandy story.—C. E. L.

In some New England towns this winter enough snow fell to supply drinking water for weeks. Get the weather shark to figure the number of gallons of water to each inch of snow and apply the result to the water consumption in your town.—M. T.

The District Judge in Jersey, Illinois, makes all the people paroled by him go to church once a month and read a chapter a week of the Bible. Does your District Judge approve of this novel regulation, and how much effect does he believe that it would have? Also interview ministers and social workers on this.—P. E. M.

There is a human interest story, which will interest more readers than you ever imagined, waiting for you if you will assign a reporter to probe into the facts behind the now universal popularity of the public weighing machine, which now is a greater revenue producer than the peanut vending and penny-in-the-slot gum machine.—J. M. M.

Now that spring is drawing near, why not invite some of the successful gardeners to contribute a few articles to your paper telling what kind of garden stuff is best adapted to the locality, how, and when to plant it, and so forth?—B. F. C.

A middle western newspaper has found that a splendid local feature for its society page is a series of short articles on auction bridge by a local woman who is an expert at this game and who gives lessons to women who are anxious to learn the game. The feature is widely commented on and is evidently read with great interest by many women. Other papers could easily get up the same sort of a feature.—F. H. W.

Is "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse," the famous poem of Will Carleton, a thing of the past in your section? The Boston Herald took a census of the poorhouses of Massachusetts and found many of them going out of use for want of occupants. Numerous live facts were uncovered and pictures were obtained. It made a splendid Sunday special.—J. M. M.

What would a resident of your community returning home after a visit of ten years abroad find changed about the place? What landmarks have been removed and what new buildings and projects have since come into being? A nice feature story can be thus worked up and a glimpse of ten years hence into the future might not be amiss.—W. A. M.

On to London!

The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World are cordially invited to hold their 1924 Convention in London, England.

Lever Brothers Company, Cambridge, Mass., have heard with the greatest interest of the proposal that the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World should hold their 1924 Convention in London, England.

They hope that the proposal will become a fact, thereby providing yet another link between the two great English-speaking nations of the world.

Should this Convention be held in London, Lever Brothers Company desire to issue a very cordial invitation to all the members to visit the far-famed village and works at Port Sunlight, Cheshire —the English headquarters of their company.

They know full well that the members will be received at Port Sunlight with a hearty welcome, and will find preparations made there to ensure that every moment of their visit is full of interest.

A Plea for Holding the 1924 Convention
IN LONDON

Sentiment apart, there are sound business reasons for holding the 1924 Convention of The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in London.

Here are a few facts.

A Convention in London will afford a unique opportunity for an interchange of ideas as to the best and most effective methods of marketing, selling, distributing and Advertising in the respective markets.

The Advertising & Marketing methods of the U. S. A. as applied to this Country, and vice versa, while probably quite sound in principle when tested by the home practice, are apt to go awry in operation because the conditions of the two markets are dissimilar, at any rate, in points of detail. On the one hand there is the U. S. A. market, stupendous in size, covering vast distances, and territories; on the other the English, small by comparison, and compact.

Failure to appreciate this fundamental difference in the respective markets is but too often responsible for the misapplication of Advertising and merchandising plans however sound in principle, whether designed by an American House for England or an English House for America.

The difference in distance to be covered, for instance, exercises a profound influence on the type of media to be used in conducting a National campaign in the respective countries; for example, London Daily Morning papers are practically National papers; they radiate over the length and breadth of the land; the same obviously cannot be said of a New York or Chicago Daily paper.

The above must be read purely as a general observation to illustrate one phase of the difference between the two markets, and is not intended to rule out other possible media; final selection obviously depends on other factors such as class of goods, etc. This question of distance also affects the method of distribution of goods, question of depots, etc.

By holding the Convention in London, our American friends give themselves an opportunity of, firstly, studying the conditions of this market for themselves, and, secondly, of bringing home to English manufacturers and Advertisers the conditions essential to success in the American Market.

Ask yourself this question: Can you get this information first hand by holding the Convention in an American City—can you tell your story to so great a number of British Advertising and Merchandising interests at a distance of 3,000 miles?

We believe that the interchange of views in a Convention in London can only be productive of good and better understanding of the problems of the two markets, and with this better understanding, better and more successful business will surely result. We in England are keen on this Convention, we believe it will inspire, invigorate and broaden our views, that it will let light into dark corners.

We believe that the American delegates after the Convention is over will be glad they voted for London in 1924. They are assured of a hearty, spontaneous welcome, they can rest assured.

A PERSONAL NOTE

It has been our privilege to assist in conjunction with our corresponding Agents, The Morse International Agency, New York, to assist in and advise on the Advertising plans of several American products. We know what is needed to undertake a successful Advertising and Merchandising campaign in England. Conditions in this country are changing; far greater attention is now paid to Salesmanship than formerly—and with these factors we are thoroughly conversant. We back the idea of the Convention because we believe it will teach us more than we know already. We have no conventional plan to offer—our Service is based on the study of the article to be marketed and the conditions surrounding it, and the objective to be attained. It is always a pleasure to us to investigate the conditions and possibilities for the development of any article of standard worth—and to report fully on the conditions.
